P R E F A C E.

IN the following pages I have endeavoured to furnish the Oriental Student with a correct edition of the most celebrated drama of India's greatest dramatist. Strange to say, no edition of the text of the "Śakuntalā" has ever before been published in England. Yet no composition of Kālidāsa displays more the richness of his poetical genius, the exuberance of his imagination, the warmth and play of his fancy, his profound knowledge of the human heart, his delicate appreciation of its most refined and tender motions, his familiarity with the workings and counterworkings of its conflicting feelings,—in short, more entitles him to rank as "the Shakespeare of India." Nor, in comparing him with our own great Dramatist, should we fail to remark the command of language exhibited by the present play. In this respect the singular flexibility and copiousness of Sanskrit may have even given him the advantage. On the Continent, the "Śakuntalā" has been studied and admired, not only by oriental scholars who possess a correct edition of the text, but by the general public, who enjoy the advantage of good translations; insomuch that Goethe, Schlegel, and Humboldt have all expressed their admiration of this masterpiece of the Hindú Poet. Goethe's four beautiful lines, which appeared in 1792, are—

"Willst du die Blüthe des frühen, die Früchte des späteren Jahres, Willst du was reizt und entzückt, willst du was sättigt und nährt, Willst du den Himmel, die Erde, mit einem Namen begreifen:
Nenn' ich Śakuntalā, Dich, und so ist Alles gesagt."*

* Thus translated for me by Professor Eastwick —

"Wouldst thou the young year's blossoms and the fruits of its decline,
' And all by which the soul is charmed, enraptured, feasted, fed, Wouldst thou the earth and heaven itself in one sole name combine?
I name thee, O Śakuntala! and all at once is said."

Augustus William von Schlegel, in his first Lecture on Dramatic Literature

In England, on the contrary, we have depended for our knowledge of the “Śakuntalā” solely on Sir William Jones’ translation, which does not truly represent the original. The other great dramatic work of the same Poet, the “Urvaśī” or “Vikramorvaśī,” is indeed known to the public by the admirable translation of Professor H. H. Wilson; but, with the exception of my own edition of this play, published at Hertford, and intended merely to meet the wants of the lecture-room until I should have leisure to perfect it on the same plan as the present volume, no edition of the text of either play has ever been printed in this country. Nor have other Sanskrit dramas, in spite of the interest excited by Professor Wilson’s translations, received more attention at the hands of English editors of Oriental works. Only one other play, the “Vira-charitra,” edited by Dr. Trithen, can be reckoned among the many important publications that have issued from the presses of our Oriental printers. Possibly our backwardness in editing the text of these compositions, may be attributed to our accidental preference for other productions in a language, which has surprized the world by the variety of its literary treasures, and by the new direction it has given to philological study; or, perhaps, to our acquiescence in the Calcutta

(translated by Black), says:—“Among the Indians, the people from whom perhaps all the cultivation of the human race has been derived, plays were known long before they could have experienced any foreign influence. It has lately been made known to Europe, that they have a rich dramatic literature, which ascends back for more than two thousand years. The only specimen of their plays (nataks) hitherto known to us is the delightful Sakuntala, which, notwithstanding the colouring of a foreign climate, bears in its general structure such a striking resemblance to our romantic drama, that we might be inclined to suspect we owe this resemblance to the predilection for Shakspeare entertained by Jones, the English translator, if his fidelity were not confirmed by other learned orientalist. In the golden times of India, the representation of this natak served to delight the splendid imperial court of Delhi.”

Alexander von Humboldt, in treating of Indian poetry (Kosmos, translated by Prichard, vol. ii., p. 38), observes: “The name of Kalidasa has been frequently and early celebrated among the western nations. This great poet flourished at the splendid court of Vikramaditya, and was, therefore, cotemporary with Virgil and Horace. The English and German translations of the Sakuntala have excited the feeling of admiration which has been so amply bestowed upon Kalidasa. Tenderness in the expression of feelings, and richness of creative fancy, have assigned to him his lofty place amongst the poets of all nations.” In a note (p. 114), he says: “Kalidasa, the celebrated Author of the Sakuntala, is a masterly describer of the influence which Nature exercises upon the minds of lovers. The scene in the forest, which he introduced in the drama of Vikrama and Urvasi, is one of the most beautiful and poetical productions which have appeared in any time.”

editions (now out of print), published under the authority of the Committee of Public Instruction, and printed at the Education press.

So far as I can collect, the actual extent of our knowledge of the Hindú Theatre—whether acquired through English translations, or the printed editions of foreign countries—may be thus stated. Seventy years have elapsed since Sir W. Jones discovered that there existed in India a number of Nāṭakas, or Sanskrit dramas, many of them of great antiquity; some abounding in poetry of such undoubted merit, and in pictures of Hindú life and manners so charming and faithful, as to render them prizes of the greatest value to all classes of literary men. Eager to apply the means thus gained of filling what was before an empty niche in the Temple of Sanskrit Literature, Sir W. Jones addressed himself at once to translate into English the “Śakuntalā,” which he was told was the most popular among the natives. Unfortunately the Pandits omitted to inform him that the multiplication of manuscripts of this play, consequent upon its popularity, had led to a curious and perplexing result,—not, however, unexampled, as has since been proved by the two-fold version of the “Rāmāyaṇa,”—namely, that the various manuscripts separated themselves into two groups or classes: the one class embracing all those in Devanāgarī writing, which, without perfect uniformity, had still a community of character; the other, all those in Bengālī.

German scholars distinguish these two classes of manuscripts by the names “Devanāgarī recension” and “Bengālī recension,” which terms may conveniently be adopted. The Devanāgarī recension is the older and purer: the Bengālī, however, must have existed at least 400 years, since it is followed by the “Sāhitya-darpana,” one MS. of which bears the date 1504 of our era. The MSS. of the Devanāgarī class are chiefly found in the Upper Provinces of India, where the great demand has produced copyists without scholarship, who have faithfully transcribed what they did not understand, and, therefore, would not designedly alter. On the other hand, the copyists in Bengal have been Pandits, whose cacothetes for emending, amplifying, and interpolating, has led to the most mischievous results. The bold and nervous phrasology of Kālidāsa has been either emasculated or weakened, his delicate expressions of refined love clothed in a meretricious dress, and his ideas, grand in their simplicity, diluted by repetition or amplification. Many examples might be here adduced; but I will only refer the student to the third Act of the Bengálí recension, where the love-scene between the King and Śakuntalá has been expanded to five times the length it occupies in the MSS. of the Devanágari recension, and the additions are just what an indelicate imagination might be expected to supply. Even the names of the dramatis-personæ have been tampered with: the King Dushyanta is changed into Dushmanta; Anasúyá into Anusúyá; Vátáyana into Párvatáyana; Sánumatí into Mísraśśí; Taraliká into Pingaliká; Dhanamitra into Dhanavridhí; Márkaṇḍeya into Sankochana.

Unfortunately, it was a MS. of this recension, and not a very good specimen of its class, that Sir W. Jones used for his translation. From him, therefore, was gained about sixty-five years since, the first incorrect knowledge of this, the first Sanskrit play known to Europeans. No edition of the text appeared till about forty years afterwards, when one was produced, after immense labour, at Paris, in the year 1830, by M. Chézy. He deserves great credit for the difficulties he surmounted; but his edition was also from a MS. of the Bengálí recension, and has no more value than Sir W. Jones' translation. It abounds also in typographical and other more serious errors. An edition of the "Śakuntalá" was subsequently printed in Calcutta, also from Bengálí MSS., and in the Bengálí character, by Prema-chandra, dated Śáka 1761, or A.D. 1839.

It was reserved for Dr. Otto Bochtlingk to be the first to edit the Devanágari recension of this play at Bonn in the year 1842. No other edition of the text of this recension has been published until the present time; and in England even the Bengálí text has never yet appeared.

The translations of this play which have been published since that of Sir W. Jones and the German version of his translation by Forster, in 1791, are,—first, the French of M. Chézy; subsequently, the German of Hirzel, Rückert, and Bochtlingk; a Danish translation by Hammerich; and, very recently, another German translation in prose and verse, by Meier: not to speak of Danish and Italian versions of Sir W. Jones' English.

I propose myself very shortly to offer to the public a free

English translation, in prose and verse, of the Devanāgarī recension of this drama.

Of the "Vikramorvaśī," the twin play of the "Śakuntalā," two editions have appeared on the Continent; one at Bonn, by Lenz, and a more perfect one at St. Petersburg, by Bollensen: an edition of this play was also brought out in Calcutta, which is now out of print. Translations by Hoeser and Hirzel have been published in Germany. The "Mālavikāgnimitra," also attributed to Kālidāsa, has been edited at Bonn, by Tullberg, but the notes and translation which were promised, have not yet appeared. The "Mṛichchhakatī," supposed to be the oldest Sanskrit play extant, has been well edited in Germany by Stenzler, and in Calcutta. From the Education-press of Calcutta have also issued editions of the "Mālatī-mādhava," "Uttara-rāma-charitra," "Mudrā-rākshasa," and "Ratnāvali," all of which, as well as the "Vikramorvaśī," have been translated into English prose and verse by Professor Wilson. The poetical merit of these translations must always secure for them a high degree of favour; and the Essay prefixed to them affords copious and valuable information on the Dramatic System of the Hindūs. It should be mentioned that a literal English prose translation of the "Vikramorvaśī" by Mr. Cowell, has recently issued from the press of Mr. Austin, of Hertford. The allegorical philosophical drama "Prabodha-chandrodaya" has been edited both in Calcutta and in Germany, and the "Mahā-nāṭaka," or "Hanuman-nāṭaka," (a dramatic history of Rāma-chandra, attributed to the monkey chief Hanumān) in Calcutta. Part of the "Dhūrta-samāgama" will be found in Professor Lassen's "Sanskrit Anthology." Professor Wilson, in the appendix to his "Hindū Theatre," has given interesting abstracts of some unedited plays. Beyond this, as far as I can recollect, nothing very important has been effected either in England or abroad in relation to the Indian Drama.

I am bound to acknowledge that I have made free use of Dr. Bochtlingk's edition of the text of the "Śakuntalā" in preparing the following pages for the press. The merit of his work can hardly be overrated; but I may, without presumption, say that I have discovered many better readings, corrected some errors, and introduced much original matter in the shape of annotations. In point

In regard to the text of the present drama, if I have succeeded in producing a more correct edition of the Devanāgarī recension than that of Dr. Bochtlingk, the merit is due to the more ample materials at my command. I have taken care to avail myself of Dr. Bochtlingk's corrections of himself, and his after-thoughts at the end of his work, as well as of such critical remarks as coincided with my own views. Often working independently of him, I have arrived at similar results, because I have had access to all the materials whence his Apparatus Criticus was composed. More than this: Dr. Bochtlingk tells us that his edition was not prepared from original MSS., but that Professors Brockhaus and Westergaard having more or less carefully collated certain MSS. in the East-India House Library, and in the Bodleian at Oxford, and made only partial extracts from three native commentaries, handed over the results of their labours to him. All these MSS. and Commentaries have been placed at my disposal, and most of them left in my possession until the completion of my work. Not a passage has been printed without a careful collation of all of them, and the three Commentaries have been consulted from beginning to end.

The MSS. which I have principally used, are:—

1. A MS. from the Colebrooke collection, and, therefore, from the Eastern side of India, numbered 1718.
2. A MS. from the Mackenzie collection, and therefore from Southern India, numbered 2696.
3. A MS. from the Taylor collection, and therefore from Western India, numbered 1858, dated Śāka, 1734.

All these belong to the East-India House Library, and represent the three Indian Presidencies respectively.

4. A copy of a very good MS. at Bombay, presented to me by Mr. Shaw, of the Bombay Civil Service.

5. An old Bengālī MS. belonging to the Library of the East India House, numbered 1060.

6. A very old Bengālī MS. from Professor Wilson's collection in the Bodleian.

I have from time to time consulted other Bengālī MSS., but have rarely admitted readings from them, unless supported by some one of the Devanāgarī. Thus, the verses which I have inserted at the beginning of the third Act are supported throughout by my own and the Taylor MS., and partially by that of the Mackenzie collection.

The following are the three Indian Scholiasts :—

1. Kāṭavema, whose commentary, from the Mackenzie collection at the East-India House, is the only one in the Devanāgarī character. He was the son of Kāṭa Bhūpa, minister of Vasanta (who was himself the author of a dramatic work called “Vasanta-rājīya”), King of Kumāra-giri, a place on the frontiers of the Nizam’s dominions. He must have lived after the commencement of the sixteenth century, as he quotes Hāḷāyudha, the author of the “Kavi-rāhasya” [see Westergaard’s preface to the “Radices Linguae Sanskritæ”]. This commentary is very corrupt; but where it is intelligible, is of great utility in throwing light on the more difficult passages of this play.

2. Śankara, whose commentary, from Professor Wilson’s collection in the Bodleian Library, is on the Bengālī recension, and written in the Bengālī character. In many places it agrees with the readings of the Devanāgarī recension, or at least notices them.

3. Chandra-śekhara, whose commentary, belonging to the East-India House, is also on the Bengālī recension, and seldom does much more than repeat the words of Śankara. If this Chandra-śekhara is the same person as the father of Viśwa-nātha, the author of the “Sāhitya-darpaṇa,” he probably lived sometime in the fifteenth century.

I have never failed to consult the three commentaries before deciding on the reading of my text, and have made their interpretations the basis of the literal translation I have given of the metrical part of the play.

All that is known of Kālidāsa, the author of the “Śakuntalā,” may be stated in a few words. He lived in Ujjayinī or Oujein, the capital of King Vikramāditya, who flourished 56 years B.C., and whose reign is the starting-point of the Hindū Era called Samvat. He was one of the nine celebrated gems of that monarch’s court, the splendour of which is a favourite theme with Hindū writers in all languages. The other works attributed to him are the “Vikramorvaśī,” and “Mālavikāgnimitra,” before noticed; the “Megha-dūta,” or Cloud-messenger, a short but beautiful poem, which has been edited by Professor Johnson in England and by Mr. Gildemeister at Bonn, and translated into English verse by Professor Wilson; the “Raghu-vanśa,” a heroic poem, edited and translated into Latin by Stenzler; the “R̥itu-sanhāra,” edited and translated by Bohlen, a short poem on the six Seasons, each verse of which is like a medallion, giving a complete picture of some Indian scene; the “Kumāra-sambhava,” a poem on the Birth of Skanda, the god of war, of which part has been lost; the rest, edited by Stenzler, and recently translated into English verse by Mr. Griffiths. The “Śringāra-tilaka,” “Prāśnottara-mālā, Hāsyārṇava,” and “Śrūta-bodha,” are also ascribed to Kālidāsa. The “Nalodaya,” attributed to him, is certainly the production of a later epoch.

I have to express my acknowledgements to Professor Johnson, who has assisted me in revising the proof-sheets of this volume, and has aided me by occasional suggestions. I have also to thank Dr. Max Müller for some information connected with the Vedas.

Every credit is due to Mr. Austin, of Hertford, for the spirited manner in which he has undertaken the printing and publication of this and other Oriental works, and spared neither trouble nor expense in carrying them through the press.

The worshippers of Śiva, who were Pantheists in the sense of believing that Śiva was himself all that exists as well as the cause of all that is, held that there were eight different manifestations of their god, called Rudras [or Rudra, Bhava, Sarva, Íśāna, Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra, Mahādeva] and that these had their types or representatives in the eight visible forms enumerated here. So the Vishnu-Purāṇa as quoted by Śankara [p. 58, Wilson]—'Brahmā assigned to them their respective stations: water, the sun, earth, fire, air, æther, the officiating Brāhmaṇ [dīkṣhito brāhmaṇaḥ], and the moon; these are termed their visible forms [tanavaḥ].' In the opening of Mālavikā, Śiva is said to uphold the universe by means of these forms, aṣṭābhir tanubhir bibhrataḥ kṛtsnam jagadapi. See also Kumāra-s., iv., 76. Śankara, with far-fetched subtilty, points out how each of these types of Śiva is intended by the poet to typify events and circumstances in the life of Śakuntalā. Thus, ya sṛṣṭih, etc. is compared with the sentiment in verse 43; and ye dve, etc., is supposed to be significant of her two female friends.

¹ In the Hindú drama every piece commences with a prologue, which is preceded by the Nándí, invoking the favour of some deity. Bharata says, Sútradhárah pathen nándim madhyamam [prathamam : Ch.] swaram áśritah, 'the Sútradhára may recite the Nándí in a tone neither high nor low.' The stage-manager was generally a Bráhmaṇ, and therefore qualified to recite the Nándí in his own person. He did so, however, as a Bráhmaṇ, and not in his character of Sútradhára, or manager, which he did not assume till he had concluded the Nándí. Nándyante sútradhárah is therefore equivalent to nándim pathitvā sútradháro vadati. So Chandra-śekhara, Nándi, etadante sútradháro vadati, nándim pathitvā anyad vadati ityarthah. Hence, the word praviśya, 'entering,' is not required; the reciter of the Nándí remaining on the stage in the character of manager. [Iti nayena nándyante sútradhára-praveśo 'pástaḥ : Ch.] If, however, the manager happened not to be a Bráhmaṇ, he seems to have had no right to the title Sútradhára, nor to have been qualified to recite the Nándí, but in that case some Bráhmaṇ pronounced the blessing, and the Sthápaka then entered as Sútradhára. Such, at least, seems to be the meaning of Bharata's aphorism [ranga-plajám vidhaya ádau sútradháre vimirgate sthápakah praviśet páśchāt sútradhára-guṇákṛitih] though all the extant plays make the Sútradhára first recite the benediction, and then carry on the dialogue. The Sáh.-darp., p. 137, has the following: Idánim pūrva-rangasya samyak-prayogábhávād eka eva sútradhárah sarvam proyodayati iti vyavahárah sa sthápakah. The blessing is usually followed by some mention of the author of the piece, an appeal to the favour of the audience, and a short dialogue between the manager and one of the actors [páripárświka]. In the present play, the actress sings a song for the amusement of the audience; and in every case, the conclusion of the prelude prepares them for the entrance of one of the dramatis-personæ. Hence, the manager exclaims, 'I was forcibly carried away by the ravishing melody of thy song, like king Dushyanta here by the very fleet antelope.'

² 'O long-lived one!' a respectful mode of addressing kings. Chandrasekharā quotes a verso of Bharata, Vaded rājñim cha chetīm cha bhavatīti

³ 'Casting (my) eye on the black-antelope and on thee with-thy-strung-bow

'having the string [jya] up;' at the end of the chase the bow would be sithila-jya: see verse 40. Sa-jya is used like adhi-jya. Pinākin is Śiva, armed with his bow or trident called Pināka. [So the bow of Vishnu has a name Sārṅga, and that of Arjuna, Gāṇḍīva: Megh., 48, 50.] In illustration, Kāṭavema refers to Rāghu-v., xi., 44, Dhanuḥ, yena vṛiṣha-dwājō vāṇam asṛi- jad vidruta-kratu-mṛigānusārīṇam. Śiva, not being invited to Dakṣha's celebrated horse-sacrifice, was so indignant, that with his wife he suddenly presented himself, confounded the sacrifice, dispersed and mutilated the gods, and chasing Yajna, 'the lord of sacrifice,' who fled in the form of a fleet deer, overlook and decapitated him. The Vāyu-Purāna makes Śiva create a manifestation of himself as a monstrous being named Vīra-bhadra, who pursues Yajna in the form of a deer: see Vishnu-Purāna, p. 65.

² '[With surprize.] How now! the deer has become visible with difficulty [lit., with effort] to me pursuing (him).'

⁴ 'Separated by a longer interval' or 'distance.'

⁵ The expressions nirūpya and nāṭayitwā, which occur so frequently in the stage-directions, are undoubtedly synonymous. They may both be translated by 'acting,' 'gesticulating,' 'exhibiting by gesticulation.' The properties and paraphernalia of the Hindú stago were as limited as the scenery; and though seats, thrones, weapons, and cars were certainly introduced, yet much had to be supplied by the imaginations of the spectators, assisted by the gesticulations of the actors. Thus, though the car of Dushyanta might have been represented on the stage, the horses would be left to the imagination, and the speed of the chariot would only be indicated by the gesticulations of the charioteer. In a subsequent part of this Act, Śakuntalā is pursued by a bee, which, by her gestures, she tries to beat off; but we are not to suppose that an artificial bee, suspended by an invisible wire, was brought upon the stage, as might be attempted in a modern theatre.

¹ 'The reins being loosed, these chariot-horses run along as if with impatience of the speed of the deer [i.e., impatient or emulous of its speed], having the fore-part of their bodies well stretched out, having the chowrie which forms their crests motionless, having the upper [part of their] ears depressed [or bent backwards], not to be overtaken even by the dust raised by themselves.'—The chāmari or chowrie was formed of the white bushy tail of the Yak or Bos grunniens, and was used for whisking off flies; also as an emblem of princely rank. It was placed as an ornament between the ears of horses, like the plume of the war-horse of chivalry. The velocity of the chariot caused it to lose its play and appear fixed in one direction, like a flag borne rapidly against the wind. A similar idea occurs in the commencement of the Vikramorvaśī, chitrārambha-vinīśchalam haya-sirasi chāmaram. There is some difficulty in nibhṛita-rādhwa-karṇāḥ. The commentators explain nibhṛita by nīśchala, 'motionless.' This meaning is not supported by the dictionary, nor by any passage with which I am acquainted. The most usual sense of nibhṛita is 'secret,' 'modest,' 'humble,' 'low' [Gīt. Gov. ii., 11; ii., 21. Hitop. passim.] Hence may easily flow the acceptation 'depressed,' 'bent down.' The ears of a horse while running at full speed are not exactly erect, but rather bent backwards so as to present the least resistance to the wind. This interpretation is confirmed by the reading of the Bengálí MSS., chyuta-karṇa-bhanga, 'having the flaccid part of the ear lowered;' but if the sense nīśchala be insisted on, translate—'having the cars immovably erect.'

that which was divided in half becomes as if united; that also which is by nature [really] crooked (appears) even-lined [straight] to my eyes. Nothing (seems) at a distance from me nor at my side even for a moment, by reason of the velocity of the chariot.' This is a method of describing great velocity of motion, which may be well appreciated by any one, in these days, who may have taken notice of the effect produced upon adjacent objects by an express railway speed of a mile a minute. A building which as seen in the distance has several divisions, seems to combine into one solid whole when we are suddenly brought to look at it from another point of view, its separate parts being hidden behind each other. Again, an object which has in reality a crooked or irregular outline when close to one's side, will assume more evenness and regularity of shape when we have left it at a distance.

<sup>1</sup> 'With himself as the third,' or 'with himself making the third,' i.e., himself and two others. This is a remarkable compound not unusual in Sanskrit. Compare Pāṇḍavā mātṛi-shaṣṭāh, 'the Pāṇḍavas with their mother as the sixth,' i.e., five persons, or six counting their mother. [Hid. i. 1, Bopp.] Again, chhāyā-dvītiyo Nalah, 'Nala made two by his shadow,' 'umbra-geminatus' [Nala, Bopp, ch. v., 26.] Also, adhito chaturō vedān akhyāna-panchamān, 'he reads the four Vedas with the ākhyānas as a fifth' [Nala, vi., 9]. A very similar idiom prevails in Greek, αὐτὸς being used after ordinal numbers to show that one person in conjunction with some others, whose number is less by one than the number mentioned, has lone something: thus, πέμπτος αὐτὸς, 'himself with four others.' [Thucydides, I. xlv.] The τρίτον ἡμιτάλαντον 'two talents and a half,' and ἑξέδομον ἡμιτάλαντον 'six talents and a half' of Herodotus [I. 15, 50] afford a further illustration of this idiom.

<sup>१</sup> 'Not indeed, not indeed must this arrow (of thine) be allowed to descend upon this tender body of the deer, like fire upon a heap of fawns. Where, forsooth, on the one hand [cha], is the very frail existence of fawns? and where, on the other, are thy sharp-falling adamantine shafts?' i.e., Where is the suitability or congruity between the one and the other? What has one got to do with the other? How great a contrast or difference is there between the one and the other! Let not your shafts waste their strength upon an object so frail and tender, but let them be directed towards a mark more fitted to prove their adamantine qualities. This repetition of kwa to express great contrast or unsuitability between two things is very remarkable. It is used by Kālidāsa again at the end of the second Act of this play, kwa vayan, etc.; also in the fifth verse of the Megha-dūta, thus,—'Where is a cloud which is a collection of vapour, fire, water, and wind? and where the meaning of messages to be received by intelligent mortals?' i.e., Why deliver a message intended for intelligent human beings to a cloud? What possible connection can there be between objects whose nature is so different?—A very good example of his use of kwa also occurs in the second line of the Raghu-vanśa, 'Where is the race sprung from the sun? and where my scanty powers of mind? (In attempting the history of this race) I am foolishly about to cross the trackless ocean in a small boat.' This idiom is imitated in Telugu [see Morris' Selections, Story 39]: 'Where is the lake Mānasa? and where art thou?' i.e., What hast thou to do with the lake Mānasa? What connection can there possibly be between you?—The majority of MSS. read pushpa-rāsau: I cannot agree in preferring tūla-rāsau, for the very reason that cotton is more susceptible of fire than flowers, and there would be less of incongruity in throwing fire upon the former than upon the latter.

² 'This is worthy of your honour, who art the light of the race of Puru,' i.e., an illustrious descendant of Puru. Compare in the beginning of the Vikramorvaśī, sadrīṣam idam soma-vansa-sambhavasya. In English we have the same idiom, 'this is just like [i.e., worthy of] one born in the Lunar race.' The two great lines or dynasties of kings according to Hindī mythology were the Solar and the Lunar. The Solar begins with Ikṣhvāku the son of Vaivasvata, the son of Vivasvat, or the Sun, and is carried on through Kakutstha, Dilīpa, Raghu, Aja, and Daśaratha, to his son the great Rāma-chandra, hero of the Rāmāyana. Under the Lunar come Puru and Dushyanta, and some of the most celebrated heroes and demi-gods, as—1. Soma; 2. his son, Budha; 3. his son, Purūravas; 4. his son, Āyus; 5. his son, Nabusha; 6. his son, Yayāti; 7. his sons, Puru and Yadu. From Puru were descended Tansu, Anila, Dushyanta and Bharata. From his brother Yadu came Satwata, Śura, Vasudeva, and his sons Balarāma and Kṛishṇa. From Bharata the son of Dushyanta and descendant of Puru, came after a time Ajamīdha, Samvarana, Kuru, Sántanu, Bhīshma, and Kṛishnadwaipāyana or Vyāsa. The latter was the father of Dhṛitaāshtra and Pāṇḍu. The quarrels of the hundred sons of Dhṛitarāshtra with their cousins the five sons of Pāṇḍu (all of them being thus descended from Kuru and Puru) form the subject of the Mahābhārata, the great poem said to have been written by the father of Pāṇḍu and recited to his great-great-grandson Janamejaya. These two separate lines were, however, occasionally intermixed by marriage, and a cross occurs at the very beginning, by the marriage of Ilā, daughter of Vaivaswata, with Budha. Paraśu-rāma, as a Brāhman, belonged to neither dynasty, but was connected with the Solar on his mother's side: he is said to have destroyed the whole Kshatriya race (see the note to verse 22).

² This is the usual exclamation which serves to ratify any auspicious omen or prophecy uttered by a Brāhman. Brāhmaṇa-vachas may be applied; 'the word of a Brāhman is accepted.' See the same phrase in the Vikramorvaśī, Act 2.

³ Compare Raghu-vaṇśa, xiv., 70; i. 49.

A parallel passage occurs in Raghu-vansa, xviii., 47, 'the earth was preserved by his arm, though without the mark of the scar formed by the bow-string' (abaddha-maurri-kīṇa-lāñchhanena). The ancient Hindús extracted from the leaves of the Múrvá plant (Aletris) very tough, elastic threads, with which they made their bow-strings [maurri], and which for that reason, were ordained by Manu to form the girdle or zone of the military or Kshatriya class. Manu, II., 42.

² Soma-tirtha is a place of pilgrimage in the West of India, on the coast of Guzerat, near the temple of Somunáth. It is also called Prabhása. The fable is that Soma, or the Moon, was here cured of the consumption brought upon him by the imprecation of Daksha, his father-in-law [Mahábhárata, vol. iii., p. 249; Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 561.] A tirtha is a place of pilgrimage, generally fixed on the bank of some sacred stream, especially the Ganges; or in the vicinity of some holy spring. The word is derived from trī, 'to cross,' or 'pass over,' implying that the stream has to be passed through, either for the washing away of sin, or for extrication from some difficulty or adverse destiny. Thousands of devotees still flock to the most celebrated tirthas, Benares, Haridwár, etc.

¹ The sense of ābhoga which is required here, has not been fixed in the dictionary. The commentators explain it by vistāra, 'extension,' 'breadth,' 'amplitude.' One of them [Kāṭavema] gives an additional synonym, paripūrnatā, 'fulness,' 'completion,' 'satiety.' Śāṅkara, in explaining the word parindha in the sense of 'circumference,' gives ābhoga as a synonym. Ābhoga occurs in the Megha-dūta [verse 90] in the compound gaṇḍābhoga which is explained by kapola-maṇḍalam, 'the orb or circumference of the cheek,' and by gaṇḍa-sthala, 'the region or neighbourhood of the cheek'. In Wilson's Dictionary stanābhoga occurs, and is said to mean 'a man with a round or full breast.' In Śāṅkara's Commentary this very compound is used for 'fulness or roundness of breast.' Doubtless, the first meaning of ābhoga is 'enjoyment,' or (adhikaraṇa) 'the place or seat of enjoyment;' thence it passes into the sense 'fulness;' thence into 'roundness,' 'circumference;' and thence into 'circuit,' 'surrounding district,' 'region,' etc. Hence, it is clear that ābhoga must here mean 'the land stretching out in the neighbourhood of the sacred grove,' 'the district, grounds, or region surrounding it,' 'the domain or demesne.' Translate, 'Even without being told, it may be known indeed that this is the circuit [domain] of the sacred grove;' or 'that here (begins) the expanse [area] of the sacred grove;' or 'that these are the grounds of the sacred grove.'

² 'For here are the (grains of) wild-rice beneath the trees, fallen from the mouths [openings] of the hollow-trunks [koṭara] filled with parrots; in other places the polished stones (used) for bruising the fruit of the Ingudi are plainly observed; the fawns too with undeviating step [i.e., not starting

aside] from having acquired confidence, bear the sound (of the voice); and the paths of the reservoirs are marked with lines by the drippings from the ends of the bark-clothes.' Mukha may be used for the mouth or opening of anything, as the hollow of a tree. Garbha, as the last member of a compound, often denotes 'filled with,' as chūrṇa-garbhā nāḍih, 'a tube filled with powder.' The Ingudi, commonly called Ingua or Jiyaputa, is a tree from the fruit of which necklaces were made of a supposed prolific efficacy; whence the botanical name Nagelia putran-jiva or jiva-putraka [Rox.] In the Raghu-vanśa (xiv., 81) there is an allusion to the fruit being used by hermits to supply oil for lamps, and in Act 2. to its furnishing them with ointment. The synonym for the tree in the Amara-kosha is tāpasa-taru, 'the anchorite's tree.' Śāṅkara calls it muni-pādapa. Abhinna-gati may also be translated 'not running away,' literally, 'not going apart or in a different direction.' Kāṭavenna explains it by arihata-gati, 'not interrupted in their walk.' This meaning at least is suggested by abhinna-svara, 'one who does not hesitate in speaking.' The sense of the last line is settled by a passage at the end of this act, where the dust is described as falling 'on the bark dresses, moist with water, hung up (to dry) on the branches of trees [ritapa-rishakta-jalārdravalkaleshu]. In carrying these dresses from the reservoir to the trees, a line would be formed by the drippings from the corners. [śikhā = añchala Schol.]

altered, 'made different;' but it may also mean 'broken,' 'interrupted,' partially obscured.' Arvāk = agrata 'in front,' 'near.' Darbha is another name for kuśa or sacrificial grass (Poa cynosuroides). This was the sacred plant or holy grass among the Hindūs, as was verbenā among the Romans. In preparing the ground for a sacrifice it was necessary to strew it with the stems of this grass. The officiating Brāhman were purified by sitting on it and by rubbing it between their hands. Its sanctifying qualities were very various, see Manu, ii., 43. 75, 182; iii., 208, 223, 235, 256; iv., 36;
v., 115; xi., 149; and Vishṇu Purāna, p. 106. The leaves of this grass are very long, with tapering points of which the extreme acuteness is proverbial among the Hindūs; whence the expression kuśāgra-buddhi [Raghu-vanśa, v., 4] 'a person whose intellects are as sharp as the point of a kuśa-leaf.'
Dr. W. Jones quotes a passage from the Atharva-veda, in which this grass is addressed as a god. 'Thee, O Darbha! the learned proclaim a divinity, not subject to age or death; thee they call the armour of Indra, the preserver of regions, the destroyer of enemies,' etc. vol. v., p. 79. According to the Commentators this verse and the last afford an example of the anumānālan-tra, or figure called 'Inference.'

² 'This hermitage is tranquil, [i.e., a peaceful spot, undisturbed by passion or emotion] and yet my arm throbs; whence can there be any result of this in such a place? But yet the gates of destiny are everywhere.' A quivering sensation in the right arm was supposed to prognosticate union with a beautiful woman. Sir W. Jones translates, 'the garden-flowers must make room for the blossoms of the forest, which excel them in colour and fragrance.' The Suddhānta is the antahpura or 'inner suite of apartments, appropriated to women;' called also the avarodha or 'private quarter,' shut out from the rest of the house and strictly guarded. Haram is the equivalent Arabic word.

The sage Kanwa is here called 'a descendant of Káśyapa.' As a sage and Bráhmaṇ he might especially claim this celebrated personage as his progenitor; but Káśyapa, who was the son of Marichi [who was the son of Brahmá, and one of the seven Prajápatis] was a progenitor on rather a magnificent scale, as he is considered to have been the father of the gods, demons, man, fish, reptiles, and all animals, by Aditi, and twelve other daughters of Daksha. He is supposed by some to be a personification of the race who took refuge in the central Asiatic chain, in which traces of his name may be found, as Koh-kas (or Caucasus), the Caspian, Cushman, etc. [Wilson's Hindú Theatre, vol. ii., p. 12.]

captivates without art or ornament,' 'naturally beautiful.' For an account of the different orders of Rishis or sages, see the word 'saint' in the English and Sanskrit Dictionary. The śamī tree is a kind of acacia (acacia suma), the wood of which is very hard, and supposed by the Hindús to contain fire. [Śamī abhyantara-līna-páráká, Raghu-vanśa, iii., 9. See also Manu, viii., 247.] The Hindús employ it to kindle their sacred fire by rubbing two dried pieces together. The legend is that Purúravas generated primeval fire, by rubbing together two branches of the Śamī and Aswattha tree. [Wilson's Hindú Theatre, p. 190.]

like bhṛi, is 'to nourish, or be nourished.' Thence, like bhṛi, it passes into the sense of 'maintain,' 'support,' 'bear,' and thence into that of 'possess,' 'enjoy,' 'exhibit,' 'make to appear.' In these last senses it may be used actively, though in the 4th conjugation. [See Manu, ix., 37. Rāmāyana, ii., 94, 10. Raghu-vanśa, xvi., 58. Mahābhārata, vol. ii., p. 186, 2607. It is curious that our English word exhibition may have the sense of 'maintenance' (Cf. Latin exhibeo). Two Bombay MSS. read svām abhikhyān instead of svām na śobhām: the meaning would then be 'maintains its own beauty' [abhikyā is so used, Raghu-vanśa, i., 46]; and this reading would be more consistent with what follows, but by the next word atharā, as the Commentators observe, śroktam ākṣhipati, he corrects his previous remark.

² 'The lotus, though intertwined [or overspread] with the śaivala is charming; the speck, though dark, heightens [lit., extends] the beauty of the moon; this graceful one even with her bark-dress is more lovely; for what is not an embellishment of sweet forms? [i.e., everything serves as an ornament to heighten the beauty of a figure which is naturally beautiful.] Sarasi-jam, lit., 'that which is born in a pool,' a name applicable to any aquatic plant, but especially to the different kinds of lotus (Nelumbium or Nymphaea). This beautiful plant—the varieties of which, blue, white, and red, are numerous, bears some resemblance to our water-lily. It is as favourite a subject of allusion and comparison with the Hindú poets, as the rose with the Persian. It is often figuratively used to express beauty, as 'lotus-face,' or the 'lotus of the face,' 'lotus-hands,' 'lotus-feet' [Git. Gov. passim]. It is also used by women as an ornament [Act 3. of this play], and as a cooling remedy [Ratnávalí, Act 2.] The Śaivala (Vallisneria) is an aquatic plant which spreads itself over ponds, and interweaves itself with the lotus. The interlacing of its stalks is compared in the Śringāra-tilaka (verse i.) to braided hair (dhammilla). See Sir W. Jones' Works, vol. iv., p. 113. The spots on the moon were thought to resemble those on an antelope, and hence one of the moon's names, harina-kalanka 'deer-spotted.'

The following verse, which is found in the Bengálí MSS. immediately after verse 20, and has been adopted by the Calcutta edition, is omitted in all the Devanāgarī MSS., and in the commentaries of Śankara and Kāṭavema. It is probably spurious, as it repeats the same sentiment with much harshness and some obscurity of expression :—

कठिनमपि मृगाच्या वल्कलं कान्तरूपं

respects to it.' The Keśara-tree [Mimusops elengi] is the same as the Bakula or Vakula, frequent mention of which is made in some of the Purāṇas, and in the Ratnāvalī [Act 3.]. It bears a strong-smelling flower, which, according to Sir W. Jones, is even placed among the flowers of the Hindū paradise. The tree is very ornamental in pleasure-grounds. Sambhū in the caus. generally means 'to honour, or pay one's respects to another in person.' Motion towards the object seems usually, though not always, implied. Thus, sambhārayāmorājarashim, Vikramorvaśī, Act 1. And Raghu-vanśa, v., 2.; x., 56

made in Manu, ix., 90, proves that a similar custom prevailed at that period. When marriageable, she is there told to wait for three years; and after that time, if she fail to obtain a suitable husband, she is to choose for herself; [samāna-jāti-guṇam varam swayam vṛṇīta. Schol.] She is then called swayamvārā. In the Mahābhārata we have a beautiful account of the Swayamvārā of Damayantī (who chooses Nala), and of Draupadī (who chooses Arjuna, p. 52); and in the Raghu-vansa, chap. vi., of the Swayamvārā of Indumatī, sister of Bhoja, king of Vidarbha (who chooses Aja, the son of Raghu). See also Nalodaya, i., 30. Even the goddess Lakshmi is said to have exercised this privilege. See the allusion to the Lakshmi-swayamvārā at the beginning of the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī.

[Kumāra-sam. v. 60]. Upabhoga-kshama is found in the prologue of this play in connection with grishma-samaya [page 5, note 1], and in the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī with avakāśa. The first meaning of kshama is 'patient,' 'enduring.' In this compound, and many others, it is equivalent to yogyā, 'fit,' 'capable,' 'suitable;' so drishti-kshama, 'capable of being seen,' 'visible.'

¹ Api nāma, 'would that.' In this sense it occurs also in the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, api nāma Purūravā bhaveyam, 'would that I were Purūravas!'

² 'Can this (lady) possibly be sprung from a wife dissimilar in class (to that) of the father of the family.' Api nāma is here equivalent to 'may be,' 'can it possibly be,' 'I wonder whether,' expressive of some doubt [evam sambhavyate. Schol.] Kshetra = kalatra, 'a wife;' asavarna = asamāna-jātya 'of a different (and inferior) tribe or caste.' A Brāhman might marry a Kshatriyā, i.e., a woman of the military or kingly class next below him [Manu, iii., 13], and the female offspring of such a marriage would belong to the mixed class called mūrdhābhishikta or mūrdhāvāsikta 'head-anointed' [Manu, x. 6], and would be a suitable object of affection for a Kshatriya, who in his kingly character was a mūrdhābhishikta also. But if Śakuntalā were a pure Brāhmaṇī woman, both on the mother's and father's side, she would be ineligible as the wife of a Kshatriya [Mann, iii., 13].

^२ 'Without any doubt she is capable of marriage with a Kshatriya, since my honourable soul has a longing towards her: for in matters that are subjects of doubt, the tendencies [inclinations, promptings] of the hearts of good men are an authoritative guide (to the truth.)' The meaning is, 'If this damsel be the daughter of a Brāhmaṇ by a Brāhmaṇ or woman of the same caste, then why should I be conscious of such a sudden liking for one whom I could never hope to marry. This feeling of attraction and sympathy would not arise spontaneously in the breast of an honourable man, excepting towards a legitimate object of affection: for in such matters, the secret prompting [inner voice] of the heart is decisive.' He therefore concludes that she must have been of mixed origin, with some Kshatriya or regal blood in her veins; and discovers afterwards that she was, in fact, the daughter of the Rājārshi Viśwāmitra (who was originally of the Kshatriya or regal tribe) by an Apsaras. Dushyanta, as a king, belonged of course to the Kshatriya or military caste. This caste came next to the Brāhmaṇical and according to Manu [i., 87] sprang from the arm of Brahmā. They wore a girdle of mūrvā and a sacrificial cord of hemp [Manu, ii., 42, 44], and were entirely concerned with warfare and military affairs. The Mahābhārata relates that they were exterminated by Paraśu-Rāma, the representative of the Brāhmaṇical tribe, in revenge for the murder of his father, the sage Jamadagni, by the sons of Kārtavīrya. This fable is founded on the historical fact that, at some period or other, struggles, arising out of mutual jealousy of each others' encroachments, took place between the military and sacerdotal classes; and that the former did in the end succumb to the superior power and intelligence of the priests. The example of Viśwāmitra proves that it was possible for a Kshatriya, by the practice of religious austerities, to raise himself to the rank of a Brāhman. There are also other anomalies of caste to be found; for the Vishnu-Purāna makes mention of a number of men, half-warriors, half-priests, Kshatriyas by birth, and Brāhmanas by profession, called Āngirāsas or descendants of Angiras, who were said to have sprung from Nabhāga [Vish. Pur., p. 359. Mahābh. Selections, p. 23.] Kings, however, were never chosen from the Brāhmanical class, but were properly Kshatriyas [Manu, vii., 2]; though there was no positive law against their belonging to the two inferior classes of Vaiśyas and Śūdras, or even to the three mixed classes [sunkaras] formed by intermarriage with the others, viz., Mūrdhābhi-shiktas, Māhishyas and Karāṇas [Manu, x., 6]. One dynasty of kings of the line of Nanda were actually Śūdras, and kept the Kshatriyas in subjection [Vishnu Purāna, p. 467.] In fact, the king was but a high officer appointed to train the army, instruct in military exercises, administer justice, and execute the laws. These onerous duties were sufficient to deter the Brāhmanas from desiring a rank or privileges which were inconsistent with their love of dignified repose. Āryam = samaryādam, 'correct,' 'upright' [Schol.] Pramāṇam, 'that by which any thing is measured;' hence, 'a criterion or standard of truth,' 'a sure guide,' 'an authority' [pramāṇānam, 'a cause of true knowledge,' Schol.] In this sense it is usually found in the singular number, neuter gender, though in opposition to a masculine or feminine noun, or even to a noun in the plural number, as here. Thus, also Vedih pramāṇam 'the Vedas are an authority.' See also Hitopadeśa, lines 169, and 1465. Pravṛtti, 'continuous flow;' hence, 'a course of action,' 'tendency,' 'inclination.'

The 5th conjugation rejects the nasal in this participle, Pāṇini, vii., 1, 80. Rati-sarva-svam = ratī-nīdhānam, 'entirely made up, or constituted, of delight,' 'whose whole essence is delight.' occurs in the beginning of the 4th. and 5th. Acts of the Vikramorvaśī. Cf. also Málavik., 55, 19; 56, 4.

² 'Now (indeed it does prosper) by the reception of a distinguished guest.' The rites of hospitality were enforced amongst the Hindús by very stringent regulations. The observance of them ranked as one of the five great sacraments (mahá-yajñáh), under the title of nṛi-yajña or manushya-yajña 'the man-sacrament.' Brahmá, Prajápáti, Indra, Fire, the Vasus and the Sun were supposed to be present in the person of a guest, and to partake of the food that was given to him [Vishnu Purána, p. 306]. No wonder then that reverence of him was said to be conducive to wealth, to fame, to life, and to a heavenly reward. [Manu, iii., 106.] On the other hand, no punishment was thought too severe for one who violated these rites. If a guest departed disappointed from any house, his sins were to be transferred to the householder, and all the merits of the householder were to be transferred to him. [Vishnu Purána, p. 305. Hitopadeśa, line 361.] Some of the things which were to be offered to a guest by even the poorest man were food, potherbs, water for the feet, and if he could do no more, ground on which to lie. [Manu, iii., 101. Vishnu Purána, 308.]

⁴ 'This (which we have brought with us for watering our plants) will serve as water for the feet.' Water for the feet was one of the first things invariably presented to a guest in all Eastern countries. Should a guest arrive, a seat is to be offered to him, and his feet are to be washed and food is to be given him. [Vishnu Purāṇa, page 305. Compare also Luke vii., 44.] Idam i.e., erikshārtham ānītam ulakam. Schol.

² 'On the raised-seat under the Saptaparna-tree, cool with much shade, having sat down for a short time, let your honour cause removal of fatigue.' According to Śāṅkara, prachhāya = prakṛiṣṭā yā chhāyā, 'excessive shade.' The other Commentators explain it by prakṛiṣṭā chhāyā yatra dēśah, 'a place where there is excessive shade,' and by prakṛiṣṭā chhāyā yasyāh, 'having excessive shade.' A parallel passage occurs in the Mālavikāgni-mitra, page 3, line 20, 'prachchhāya-śītale śilāpattake nisannū,' etc. It seems clear that the effect of pra in this word is to give intensity to the original idea. It is needless to regard it either as a Tatpurusha or Karmadhāraya compound, although it is in such compounds especially that chhāyā becomes chhāya. [See page 5, note 1, and Raghu-vanśa, iv., 20; xii., 50. Megha-dūta, verse 103. Pāṇini, ii., 4, 22, 25.] Sapta-parṇa, 'a tree having seven leaves on a stalk' (Echites scholaris), called also vishama-chhada, 'having an odd number of leaves,' and vishāla-twach, 'having a broad bark' [Raghu-vanśa, iv., 23.] Vedikā = vīśrāma-sthānam, 'place of repose or rest.' Schol. It was probably a quadrangular raised-seat, something in the form of an altar, and covered with a roof supported by pillars, used as a kind of arbour or summer-house, for sitting or standing under. In this case it seems to have been erected under a Saptaparna-tree. Sapta-parṇa- direction something similar to ātma-gatam, but denotes that the speech which follows is supposed to be audible by one other person, to whom a private signal is made. 'That which is spoken apart from the rest, with a signal, such as holding up three fingers of the hand (tripatāka), being a mutual speech (between two), is called jantūlikam.' Śāṅkara and Śāhita-Darś., 177.

² Prakāśam, 'aloud,' another theatrical direction denoting that the words which follow are to be made audible to all, those which precede having been spoken aside.

⁵ 'O lady!' voc. case of bhavati. According to Manu, a Brāhmaṇ is to be accosted with the respectful pronoun bhavat, and to any woman not related by blood, the address bhavati or subhage bhagini is to be used [ii., 128, 129].

of Puru, for the administration of justice, have arrived at this sacred grove, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the (religious) rites are free from obstruction.' The religious rites and sacrifices of holy men were often disturbed by certain evil spirits or goblins called Rākshasas, who were the determined enemies of piety and devotion. No great sacrifice or religious ceremony was ever carried on without an attempt on the part of these demons to impede its celebration; and the most renowned saints found it necessary on such occasions to acknowledge their dependence on the strong arm of the military class, by seeking the aid of warriors and heroes. The inability of holy men, who had attained the utmost limit of spiritual power, to cope with the spirits of evil, and the superiority of physical force in this respect is very remarkable. [See Rāmāyana, I. xx., xxi., xxxii., and the end of Act 3. of this play].

honour to his guest by offering him the best of his substance and property. See page 32, note 5. There is here evidently a double-entendre. Śāṅkara explains sarva-svām by phala-mūlādikam, 'fruits, roots, and other necessities of life.' Fruits and roots were the chief food of anchorites and constituted their whole substance and worldly treasure. With an offering of these they were commanded to honour every one who came to their hermitage. [Rāmāyaṇa, I., lii., 16, and Ixi., 4. Manu, vi., 7.] The allusion, however, evidently is to Śakuntalā, who might be regarded as the holy father's most valuable possession and treasure.

² Sakhī-gatam, 'relating to your friend.' [Śakuntalā-vishayakam : Schol.] This use of gata is noticeable, see the note to ātma-gata, p. 37, note 1. Only one Devanāgarī MS. reads bharatyaṇ; but this is supported by the oldest Bengālī, which also adds kinapi.

¹ 'There is a certain Rájarshi [or royal-sage, i.e., both king and saint] of great majesty, whose family name [patronymic] is Kausika.' This was the great Viśwámitra (a descendant of Kuśa or Kuśika), whose story—he being the preceptor of Ráma-chandra—is told in the Rámáyana, I., li. lxv., and xxxv. He is there said to be the son of Gádhi (a prince of the Lunar dynasty, king of Gádhi-pur, or the ancient Kanouj) who is said to be the son of Kuśa-nátha, who is the son of Kuśa or Kuśika. According to the Vishnu Purāṇa the following is the pedigree of Viśwámitra. One of the sons of Purúravas, a prince of the Lunar dynasty [see Vikramorvaśi] was Amávasu. Thence in direct succession came Bhíma, Kāñchana, Jahnu, Sumantu, Ajaka, Valákaśwa and Kuśa. The latter had two sons, Kuśámba and Kuśa-nátha, but Gádhi was the son of Kuśámba, and was said to be an incarnation of Indra (who is hence sometimes called Kauśika); for Kuśámba had engaged in great penance, to obtain a son who should be equal to Indra, and the latter being alarmed, took upon himself the character of Kuśámba's son. Gádhi had a daughter, Satyavati, who married a Bráhmaṇ named Richika, son of Bhrigu. This Richika—with the view of securing to himself a son who should be an illustrious Bráhmaṇ, and to his father-in-law, a son of great prowess—made two messes of food, one for his own wife, and the other for the wife of Gádhi; infusing into one the qualities suited to a Bráhmaṇ, and into the other the properties of power and heroism. The two wives exchanged messes, and so it happened that the wife of Gádhi had a son, Viśwámitra, who, though a Kshatriya, was born with the inclinations of a Bráhmaṇ; and the wife of Richika had a son, the sage Janadagni, who was the father of the warrior-priest Paraśu-ráma, she having by her entreaties induced her husband to transfer the effects of the exchange of food from her son to her grandson. There is something like anachronism in the history of Viśwámitra. Satyavati, his sister, was the grandmother of Paraśu-ráma, and it was not till the close of the latter's career that Ráma-

chandra appeared on the field and became the pupil of Viśwāmītra. At any rate the Rishi must have been very old. Indeed, in the Rāmāyaṇa he is stated to have mortified himself for two thousand years before he attained the rank of a Rishi; for many years more before his cohabitation with Menakā, which led to the birth of Śakuntalā; and for many thousand years more before he became a Brāhmaṇ. It was not till after this period that he became the preceptor of Rāma-chandra, but no chronological inconsistency is too great for Hindū mythology.

² 'The story of Viśwāmītra, as told in the Rāmāyaṇa, is briefly this. On his accession to the throne in the room of his father Gādhi, in the course of a tour through his dominions, he visited the hermitage of the Muni Vāśiṣṭha one of the ten Brahmādikas or Prajāpatīs, sons of Brahmā. There the cow-of-plenty excited his cupidity. He offered the Muni untold treasures in exchange for the cow, but being refused, prepared to take it by force. A long war ensued between the King and the Muni (symbolical of the struggles between the Kshatriya and Brāhmaṇical classes) which ended in the defeat of Viśwámitra, whose vexation was such, that he devoted himself to austerities in the hope of attaining the condition of a Bráhmaṇ. The Rámáyana goes on to recount how by gradually increasing the rigour of his bodily mortification through thousands of years, he successively earned the title of Rájārshi [I., lvii., 5], Rishi [lxiii., 2], Maharshi [lxiii., 19], and finally, Brahmarshi [lxv., 18]. It was not till he had gained this last title that Vaśishṭha consented to acknowledge his equality with himself, and ratify his admission into the Bráhmaṇical state. It was at the time of Viśwámitra's advancement to the rank of a Rishi, and whilst he was still a Kshatriya, that Indra and the inferior gods, jealous of his increasing power—as exhibited in his transporting King Trisanku to the region of the stars, and in saving Śunahsephas, the son of his own brother-in-law Richika, out of the hands of Indra, to whom he had been promised by King Ambarisha as a victim in a sacrifice—sent the nymph Menaká, to seduce him from his life of mortification and continence. The Rámáyana records his surrender to this temptation, and relates that the nymph was his companion in the hermitage for ten years, but does not allude to the birth of Śakuntalá, during that period. It only informs us that at the end of ten years the Rishi having come to himself, extricated himself from this hindrance (niyama-vighna), and abandoning the nymph, departed into another region.

intoxicating beauty [form] of that (nymph).’ The commentators consider cosantodāra to be a compound of rasanta and udāra; but odāra is a legitimate Prākṛit contraction for acatāra, although avadāra would be equally correct. Compare odansayanti for aratansayanti [p. 5, note 3], hodi for havadi or bharati, jedi for jayadi or jayati, etc. Lassen’s Instit. Prāk., p. 176. Acatāra is derived from acatṛi, ‘to descend,’ and applies especially to the descent of a god from heaven. There can be nothing inappropriate in connecting it with Vasanta, ‘the Spring,’ often personified as a deity. See a passage in the 2nd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, Pekkhadu bhavam vasantā-cadārashūdan assa ahirā-mattanaṃ pamadaraṇassa, ‘let your honour observe the delightfulness of this pleasure-garden manifested by the descent of Spring.’ Unmādayitṛikam [Kāṭavema] is for unmādayitṛi, the neuter of the causal noun of agency, ‘that which causes to go mad or be intoxicated’ [adhairya-janakaṃ, ‘causing unsteadiness,’ Schol.]

^१ ‘What (happened) afterwards is quite understood’ [or guessed by me.] According to Pānini (v. 3. 27) the affix tāt, in words like parastāt, adhastāt, may stand for the nominative case, as well as for the ablative and locative. Hence parastāt is equivalent to para-crīttāntah, ‘the rest of the story,’ ‘the subsequent particulars.’

^२ ‘Exactly so,’ ‘how can it be otherwise?’ Athakim is a particle of assent.

^३ ‘It is fitting (that she should be the daughter of an Apsaras). How otherwise could there be the birth of this beautiful-form amongst mortal females? the tremulously-radiant flash does not rise from the surface of the earth (but descends from the skies).’ Apsarah-sambharatvam is the nominative case to upapadyate, Schol. According to Kāṭavema, prabhā-tarālam

[prabhayā chanchalam] jyotiḥ, is a periphrasis for vidyut, 'lightning'; but Śankara applies it also to the beams of the sun and moon. The comparison of the unearthly beauty of a nymph to the radiance of lightning is appropriate. See Megha-dūta, verse 40.

² 'Nevertheless, having heard the prayer for a husband uttered in joke by her female-friend [see page 29, line 10], my heart is held in suspense and anxious,' i.e., anxious to know the truth, as to whether she is really destined for marriage, or for an ascetic life; and fearful lest at some former time her husband may have been decided upon (pūrvam asyā varo nirṇīto na vā. Kāṭav.). Śankara interprets vara-prārthanā by svāmyabhilāsha, 'wish for a husband.' Dhṛita-dwaidhī-bhāva-kātaram is a complex Dwandwa compound. Dwaidhī-bhāva, 'a state of difference, distraction, doubt.'

^१ 'Śakuntalā threatens [reproves] her friend with her finger,' i.e., makes a threatening or chiding gesture, as if she were angry with her friend for leading Dushyanta to pursue his interrogatories, and were ashamed at the revelation of the particulars of her history. (Ātmano vṛiddā-janaka-sva-vṛittāntodghātanam. Kāṭavema.) According to Śankara, this is an example of the coquettish gesture called lalitam, i.e., though she was really eager to hear all that her lover had to say, yet by her outward gestures she appeared to be the reverse. Priyajāna-kathā-śūśrūṣhur api vahis tad-anyathā. Śankara.

^२ 'It has been rightly judged by your ladyship; from an eagerness to hear (all the particulars of) her good history, there is still something (that remains) to be asked by us.'

^३ 'Enough of deliberating; surely persons (who lead the life) of hermits may be questioned unreservedly' [freely]. Aniyantranānuyoga is equivalent to anīyama-prāśna, 'one to whom a question may be put without any restraint or ceremony.' Kāṭavema. Alam, in the sense of prohibiting or forbidding, is more usually found with the instrum. case of the noun, but, like khalu, it may sometimes be used in this sense with the indeclinable participles in tva and ya, thus alam dattvā, 'enough of giving,' or 'having given, it is enough;' so khalu pītvā, 'having drunk, hold!' Wilkins' Grammar, rule 737. The Bengālī MSS. read 'alam vichāritena.'

opposed to the ways of love, to be observed by her (merely) until her gift-in-marriage; or, on the contrary (āho), will she live to the end (of her life) along with the female deer, her favourites (from) having eyes like her own?' Dr. Bochtlingk remarks that sakṣim te jñātum icchhāmi kim anayā, etc., is equivalent to jñātum icchhāmi kim sakṣyā te, etc., 'I wish to know whether this vow is to be observed by thy friend,' etc. He gives instances of a similar construction in Draup., iv., 5. Mahābh., iii., 269. Vaikhānasa, anything relating to a vaikhānasa or hermit, tena kṛtam proktam vā vratam vaikhānasam, tattva nigatāranya-rāsa-rūpam, 'the vow which is performed or enjoined by him is called vaikhānasa, and that consists in always living in the woods.' Śaṅkara. Apradānāt – pradāna-paryantam, or devadhāt, 'up to the period of her marriage.' In the time of Manu every Hindū girl was given away in marriage before the season of maturity (ritoh prāk pradānakāla), and that father incurred great disgrace who did not so give her away. It was deemed highly reprehensible if the betrothed husband did not take her to his own house, when the marriageable period of life arrived. See Manu, ix., 4, with commentary. Vyāpāra-rodhi madanasya -kāma-kriyā-nivārahakam, 'hindering amatory actions.' According to Kāṭavema ātma-saṁyāsekṣhaṇa-vallabhābhir may be optionally resolved into ātma-saṁyāsekṣhaṇa-vallabhā abhir. Āho, a particle of doubt or asking, is said by the commentators to be used pakṣāntare or vikalpe, i.e., antithetically, or, in stating an opposite alternative.

^१ 'Even in the practice of religious duties this person [Śakuntalā] is dependant on (the will of) another [riṣi, Kanva]; nevertheless, it is the purpose of the Guru to give her away to a suitable husband.' According to Manu (ix., 2, 3), women were never to be deemed fit for independence. Day and night they were to be held by their protectors in subjection. But in certain matters, such as lawful recreations, and if they chose to enter upon a religious life, they were to be left at their own disposal. It seems that even in those matters Śakuntalā was not her own mistress. The holy father had enjoined a life of penance upon her, but had resolved that her residence in the hermitage should not be perpetual. Api śabdēna dharmā- charanasya siva-chhanda-karanīyatvam śuchitam, 'by the word 'even' it is indicated that the duties of religion are generally to be performed as a voluntary act.' Kāṭavema. Amara-Sinha explains sankalpa by mānasam karma, 'a mental act or resolution.' The rule of Vararuchi (i., 22) by which the Sanskrit guru becomes garua in Prākṛit, only applies to the adjective.

² 'O (my) heart! become hopeful [possessed of desire]; now the certainty (of what was a matter) of doubt has come to pass. That which thou suspectedst (to be) fire, the same (is) a gem capable of being touched.' Sandeha-nirṇaya, 'arriving at positive certainty on a doubtful point.' This was the doubt mentioned before, at page 30, line 1, with note 2. The word antah-karaṇa [line 5], is there used for hṛdaya. Yad [Śakuntalā-rūpam vastu] agnim tarkayasi, 'The thing, [viz., Śakuntalā] which thou imaginedst fire.' Śāṅkara. The power of a Brāhman, especially if exhibited in anger, is compared to fire [Verse 41 of this play. Bhaṭṭi, i., 23. Mahābh., I., 3010.] There may be some allusion to this here, or it may simply mean that, supposing Śakuntalā to have been a Brāhmanī woman, she would have been as inapproachable to a Kshatriya as a flame of fire. Sparśa-kshamaṁ = samparka-yogyam [see page 28, note 1, at end].

² Compare note 2, page 35. Śankara quotes an aphorism of Bhrigu, 'Who-soever does not reverently honour an unknown guest, weary with travelling, and hungry and thirsty, him they call (equal in guilt to) the slayer of a Brāhman.'

Even now her unnaturally-strong breathing causes a heaving of her breast; a collection of drops of perspiration, impeding (the play of) the śirisha in her ears, has formed upon her face: her dishevelled locks, the fillet (that confined them) having given way [fallen], are held together with one hand.' Bāhu is the arm from the shoulder-joint [ansa] to the wrist, and does not include the karabha, or part from the wrist to the fingers. It is divided into two parts, the upper arm, praganda, or that part of the arm from the elbow to the shoulder; and the lower arm, prakoshthā, commonly called the fore-arm, extending from the elbow to the wrist [see Amara-kosha, pp. 149, 150]. Atilohita-talau is a Bahuvrhi compound, in agreement with bāhū; talau cannot, therefore, be translated by 'the palms of the hands.' Wilson gives 'fore-arm' as one meaning of tala, and Śankara explains it by bhujodara. It may possibly mean the under-surface of the arms, which would be reddened by the exertion of lifting and tossing the watering-pot. Pramāṇādadhika = svābharika-mānād adhika, 'more than natural,' 'undue.' Baddham 'formed' [see page 28, note 1]. Jālakam, properly a 'net-work'—hence, 'a collection [saṃūha, Schol.] or assemblage of anything.' Śankara observes that her face was spotted with drops of perspiration so as to resemble net-work. So śvedam ānana-vilagna-jālakam: Raghu-vaṃśa ix. 68. Karṇa-śirisha-rodhi [see page 5, note 3]. The drops of perspiration would prevent the play of the pendent flower by causing it to adhere to her cheek [Sthirī-karṇāt: Śankara. Sanślesha-kāritvāt: Kaṭav.] A similar idea occurs in the Megha-dūta, verse 28, where the lotus of the ears is described as faded by the act of removing the perspiration from the cheeks in the hot weather. The lotus-flower, or one of its petals, seems to have furnished as common an ornament for the ear as the śirisha: [Megha-dūta, verses 69, 46.] Paryākulāḥ = vikīrṇāḥ, 'scattered.'

selves,' 'This is the king.' Kāṭavema]. All the Devanāgarī MSS. read udma-mudrāksharāni. Mudrā is here, not a 'seal-ring,' but 'the seal or engraved stone on the ring;' nāma-mudrā, lit., 'name-seal,' is a seal with a name engraved on it, a signet-seal. So in the Mālavikāgnimitra, [p. 5, l. 9, and 48, 4.] udga-mudrā-saṇātham anguliyakam, and sarpa-mudrakam anguliyakam, 'a ring possessed of a snake-seal,' or 'snake-stone seal.' Anuvāchya = patitwa, 'having read,' 'having decyphered.' Vach and anuvach in the causal have generally this sense in dramatic composition.

² All the MSS. have either nāruhadi or nāhadi for the Sanskrit nārhati, but the above is correct according to Lassen's Instit., Prāk., p. 193, 10.

to be held back?' i.e., 'What power have you to send me away or keep me back?' Kā = na prabhuh, avāśa: [Kātav.] i.e., 'You have no right or power.' [see page 33, note 2.] This use of the genitive case for the dative, and of the future pass. part. for the verbal noun, is peculiar to Prākṛit. The idiom of Sanskrit would require, visarjanāya rodhanāya vā, 'for loosing or binding.'

¹ 'My wish has found (free) scope,' i.e., I am at liberty to indulge it. Prārthanā = manoratha: Kātav. [See p. 46, note 1].

² Kutas, 'Whence?' 'Why so?' This expression is frequently used where a reason is about to be given in verse for some previous statement. It may be translated by 'because.'

⁴ 'Be ye near at hand to protect the animals of the penance-grove.' Sattva = jantu, 'an animal': Śāṅkara. Bochtlingk translates it by wesen, 'being,' 'existence,' 'weal,' which is a legitimate acceptance of the word.

For valkaleshu see page 17, note 2. Aruna is the glow either of sun-rise or sun-set, more usually the former. Parinatāruna, as explained by Kātavema, is the evening [śdyantana] redness of the 'sun, in contradistinction to the arunodaya or dawn. Śalabha-samūha = patanga-nivaha, 'an assemblage of grasshoppers.'

Such is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. The Bengālī have tivrāghatāt abhimukha-taru-skandha-bhagnaika-danta, 'with a violent blow having broken one tusk against the trunk of a tree standing in his way.' For pāda Kātavema reads kroḍa, 'the breast.' Valaya = veshṭana, 'anything that surrounds and encloses; as a hedge, a fence;' vrutati-valaya is the hedge of creepers surrounding the hermitage. Pāsa = bandhana-rajju, 'a binding-rope.' Schol. Murto = mūrtimān, 'possessed of a body, incarnate;' as opposed to the spiritual obstruction caused by evil spirits, etc. Bhinna-sāraṅga-yūthah is a Bahuvrīhi compound, in agreement with gajah, i.e. an elephant (yena) by whom (sāraṅga-yūtham) the herd of deer (bhinna) has been scattered [vikīrṇam]. Kātavema observes that it may be inferred that this was a wild elephant [vanya-gaja], and not an elephant belonging to the king, from its being frightened at the sight of the royal chariot [syandana]. Compare a scene in the Ratnāvali, page 27.

<sup>१</sup> The word Vidushaka means 'a witty, merry, facetious person;' 'a good-natured jolly fellow.' In dramatic language it is the title given to the jocose companion and confidential friend of the ndyaka, or hero of the piece. This character acts the same part towards the king or prince who is the hero, that her female companions and confidantes do towards the heroine of the play. He is his constant attendant, and, by a curious regulation, is to be a Bráhmaṇ, that is to say, of a caste higher than that of the king himself; and yet his business is to excite mirth by being ridiculous in person, age, and attire. Śāṅkara says that he is to be grey-haired (palitah), hump-backed (kubjah), lame (khaijuh), and with ugly features (vikṛitānanah); that the chief part of all that he says is to be humorous and nonsensical; and that he is to be allowed access to the female apartments (antah-pura-charah; see Wilson's Dramatic System, page xliii). In fact, he is a species of buffoon.

His attempts at wit, which are never very successful, and his allusions to the pleasures of the table, of which he is a confessed votary, are absurdly contrasted with the sententious solemnity of the despairing hero, crossed in the prosecution of his love-suit. The shrewdness of the heroine's confidantes never seems to fail them under the most trying circumstances; but the clumsy interference of the Vidúshaka in the intrigues of his friend, only serves to augment his difficulties, and occasions many an awkward dilemma. As he is the universal butt, and is allowed in return full liberty of speech, he fills a character which is very necessary for the enlivenment of the otherwise dull monotony of a Hind drama. He is called by Śāṅkara the upandya of the piece, or the ndyakasya upandyakah, a kind of sub-hero, or assistant to the hero: see page 46, note 3. Kālavema says, 'The Vidúshaka is the name for a ridiculous childish man (māṇavaka), who is always at the side of the hero (nāyaka-pārśwa-parivartī). He is the companion of his sports and promoter of his amusement (hāsyā-kāri-narma-suhṛid, or, narmasachiva). In effecting the three objects of human life, viz., merit, wealth, and pleasure; the family priests assist the king in the first; the young prince (yuva-rāja) and the army in the second; the Vidūshaka, the parasite (pīṭamarḍa), and the pimp (vīṭa), in the third.' For an account of the Vīṭa, see Wilson's Dramatic System of the Hindūs, page xlvii.

<sup>1</sup> 'Oh (my evil) destiny! I am worn out by being the associate of this king, who is so addicted to the chase. 'Here's a deer,' 'There's a boar,' 'Yonder's a tiger:' (in the midst of) such (cries), even at mid-day, is it wandered about from forest to forest, in the paths of the woods, where the shade of the trees is scanty in the hot season.' Vayasya is properly, 'an associate or companion of about the same age (vayas). Iti, 'so saying,' here, rather, 'so crying out.' Vana-rāji sometimes denotes 'a fine tree,' 'one that beautifies the woods:' [see Wilson's Dict.] Bopp, in his Glossary, observes that rāji, in composition, signifies 'region,' and that vana-rāji in this passage may be translated 'region of the woods.' The only other compound I can call to mind in which rāji occurs, is nila-rājayah, 'dark lines or rows (of clouds):' [verse 2 of the Ritu-sanhāra.] As most of the synonyms for rāji, such as paddhati, sarani, dli, etc.—signify 'road,' 'path,' as well as 'line,' a similar sense may be given to rāji. Ahindyate, pres. pass. of hind or hidi, with prep. ā, 'to wander about:' a very uncommon root: understand asmābhih, 'by us.' The Prākṛit, and not the Sanskṛit, is answerable for the collocation of words in this sentence. ● of meat roasted on spits, is eaten.' Katu, 'pungent,' 'ill-scented.' Sūlyamānsa, 'roast meat,' 'meat cooked on a spit.' Bhūyishtha; see page 3, note 1.

<sup>1</sup> 'Even in the night it cannot be slept peacefully (by me) having (my) joints strained by running along side of (his) horse.' Such is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. The Bengālī have turaga-gaḍinam cha saddena, 'by the noise of horses and elephants.' Anu is either 'after' or 'by the side of.' Kand or kadi, 'to break, tear, separate,' is not so common as khand; but the latter would be too strong a word in this passage. The genitive mama, 'of me,' must be supplied after śayitavyam. The instrum. case is more usual after the fut. pass. part., but not more correct.

<sup>2</sup> 'Then at the very earliest dawn, by the sons of slaves hunting the birds, I am awakened by the din of taking the forest.' Mahati-pratyūṣhe, lit., 'at great dawn.' Compare mahā-rātra, 'mid-night,' and the French 'de grand matin.' Dasyāḥ-putraiḥ stands for dāst-putraiḥ, and is to be regarded as one compound. Śaṅkara quotes a note of Pāṇini [vi. 3. 22.] to the effect that the genitive case in this compound is used ākrośe in abusing and reviling. So also in vṛishalyāḥ-putraiḥ for vṛishali-putraiḥ. Vana-grahana denotes 'surrounding and taking possession of a wood for the purpose of hunting the animals it contains [mṛiga-grahanaṁ : K.]' Those who do so are called, further on in this Act, vana-grāhināḥ, which Kāṭavema explains by vanāvarodhakāḥ, 'those who inclose a wood and obstruct the points of egress.'

<sup>3</sup> 'Even by all this my trouble does not come to an end; (for) afterwards upon the (old) boil, (another small) boil is produced.' Iyatā = etāvatā, 'by this much,' 'by so much.' Nishkrāmati = śamyati, 'ceases.' Pitakā vishphotaka, 'a pustule,' 'a small boil,' 'a pimple.' This was probably a pro-

<sup>2</sup> 'Even to-day (the light of) dawn (broke) upon the eyes (of him) thinking of that very (damsel);' that is, according to Chandra-śekhara, jāgrate ~~ava~~ rajanī nirgatā, 'the night passed away whilst he was still awake.' Kātavama remarks, 'By this it may be inferred that, with thinking of her, he had not closed his eyes all night.' Akshṇoh, i.e., drīṣor unmiṭatoḥ satoh, 'on his eyes being (still) open.' The word satoh in the commentary indicates that, akshṇoh is in the locative case dual.

Be it so; I will stand as if crippled by paralysis of my limbs.' Kā gatih, lit., 'what resource,' i.e., 'what remedy, what expedient can be devised?' This is a common phrase in Prākṛit; it occurs again in the 5th Act. Kīdāchāra-parikammam [Sanskrit, kṛitāchāra-parikarmānam]. This is the reading of one of the oldest MSS. [East-India House, 1060], and of Chandra-śekhara. Kātavema reads pratikarmānam; but parikarma and pratikarma have the same sense, viz., 'decoration after purification of the body,' 'rubbing it with perfumes after bathing.' Most of the Devanāgarī MSS. have parikkamam for parikramam, 'circumambulation.' Yavanī, properly a Muḥammadan woman, a native of Yavana or Arabia, but applied also to a native of Greece. Wilson, in his translation of the Vikramorvasī, where the same word occurs [Act 5, page 261], remarks that Tartarian or Bactrian women may be intended. However this may be, it is plain that the business of these attendants was to act as the bearers of the king's bow and arrows. At the end of Act 6. a Yavanī enters again; śārṅga-hastā, 'carrying a horn-bow.' Chézy quotes the following gloss; Yavanī yuddha-kāle rājno 'stram dadāti, 'The Yavanī in the time of war gives weapons to the king.' Kātavema says, Yavanī śāstra-dhārini, 'The Yavanī is the weapon-bearer.' Anga-bhanga, properly 'palsy or paralysis of the limbs.' Kātavema observes that the Vidūshaka here acts the Viśvakambha, which he defines as an Adhama-praveśaka or inferior introductory scene, coming between the acts (ankayor-madhya-vartī), and performed by inferior actors (nichā-pātra-prayojitah). Its object is to connect or bind together the story of the drama and the sub-divisions of the plot (kathā-saṅghattānārtham), by concisely alluding to what has happened in the intervals of the acts, or what is likely to happen at the end (bhūtānām bhāvinām api sankshepena sūchanāt).

Even though love has not accomplished its object the desire of both (of us) anticipates enjoyment.' Kāman; see note 3, page 54. Na sulabhā, i.e., from her relationship to the Rishi: K. Tad-bhāva-darśanāśvedāsi; such is the reading of all the Bengāl MSS., and of Śāṅkara. The Devanāgarī read tad-bhāva-darśandāsi where dāsi properly means 'active,' 'kept in activity,' 'stimulated to exertion,' i.e., exerting itself to obtain her. But it may be questioned whether śvedāsi be not preferable, especially as Kātavema, though he writes dāsi, explains it by santushyati, 'is cheered,' and by śvedāsitam, 'consoled.' Bhāva = śringāra-cheshṭā, 'the expression of amorous sentiments by gestures.' The gestures here referred to are described in the next verse, beginning snigdham, etc. Darśana is either 'seeing, looking at,' [avalokana: Ś.] or, 'exhibiting, showing.' [sākshāt-karana, K.] In the latter case, translate 'by her exhibition of amorous gestures.' Ubhaya, i.e., nāyaka-nāyikayoh or strī-purushayoh. Prārthanā = abhilāsha, 'longing.'

tender glance was given [lit., it was looked tenderly]; and whereas by the weight of (her) hips she moved [lit., it was moved by her] slowly, as if from dalliance; and whereas by (her) detained in these (words) 'Do not go,' [see page 51, line 2], that friend was addressed with disdain; all that certainly had reference to me. Ah! (how) a lover discovers (what is) his own! Vikshitam is here the pass. past part., and snigdham an adverb: ś. Avaruddhayā, or, according to some MSS., uparuddhayā — krīta-gamana-bādhayā or krīta-gatir-yāghātayā. Mat-parāyaṇam = mad-vishayakam, 'relating to me.' Aho here denotes wonder. [āscharye: K.] Ścatām = ātmanyatām or svakiyatām, i.e., mat-kṛitam sarvam idam, 'All that was done on my account.' 'Although her gestures appeared to be unfavourable, yet it was easy to refer them to myself.' [ātma-vishayatwāropa iti mantaryam: K.]

<sup>2</sup> 'My hands are not capable of extension [lit., do not go forward], therefore by words merely are you wished victory [lit., are you made to be victorious],' i.e., 'I cannot greet you with the usual anjali or salutation made by joining the hands and applying them to the forehead; you must therefore be contented with the salutation Jayatu! or Vijayī bhava!' This is the reading of the oldest MSS. [East-India House, 1060; Bodleian, 233]. The Calcutta edition, without the support of any MS. in my possession, adds 'jayatu, jayatu bhavān, 'Let your majesty be victorious.' This is sufficiently implied in jāpyase, which I cannot agree in deriving from jap, 'to repeat or mutter,' but rather from the causal of ji, 'to conquer.' If referred to jap the meaning could only be 'you are caused to mutter,' which does not suit the context; whereas the sense of jāpyase, as the 2nd per. sing. pres. pass. of the causal of ji, is quite suitable, and is, moreover, agreeable to the interpretation of Kāṭavema [vijayī bhava], and to that of the Calcutta edition [jayārho 's']. Lassen considers jāpyase to be the proper Sanskrit equivalent for the Prakrit jadbhāsi, although, with Chézy, he refers it to jap [Instit. Ling. Prāk., p. 361]. Most of the Devanāgarī MSS. read jābhaissam for jirayishyāni, 'I will cause to live,' 'I will wish life,' i.e., 'I will salute you with chiran jīva, 'Long life to you!' Compare page 68, line 12.

<sup>1</sup> 'Why indeed, having yourself troubled (my) eyes, do you inquire the cause of (my) tears.' Thus explained by Śaṅkara: yathā ko'pi kaśyachin netrayor angulyādikam praveśya prichehhati bhavataś cakshuṣhor āsru katham ādyati tathā tvam api, 'You are like a person who, after thrusting a finger, etc., into the eyes of any one, asks, How does a tear come into your eyes?' The Viśiṣhaka probably here quotes some proverb, and the king observes in the next line that he does not understand its application in the present case.

<sup>3</sup> 'When the reed imitates the character [grit] of the Kubja (plant), is that by its own power? (or) is it not (by the force) of the current of the river.' Vetasa, a large reed or cane [calamus rotang] which grows in Indian rivers. Kubja or kubjaka, properly 'hump-backed,' but also the name for a crooked aquatic plant [trapa bi-spinosa], called also vāri-kubja and jala-kubja. Śaṅkara says it is sometimes called kuvalaya, a name usually applied to a species of water-lily. He also mentions a reading kuñja, 'an arbour,' instead of kubja. Possibly this is the reading to which the kuñja of the Devanāgarī MSS. is to be referred, as, according to Vararuchi (II. 33), kuñja is the Prākṛit equivalent for kubja. There is doubtless a double-entendre in the word, but the first allusion is to the Kubja plant. In order to apprehend the full force of the Viśvāśaka's pleasantry in comparing himself to an upright reed, accidentally transformed into a crooked plant, it must be remembered that his natural form was that of a lame, hump-backed man [see page 59, note 1.]

<sup>1</sup> 'By you, having thus relinquished the affairs of your kingdom, it is to be lived as a forester [lit., it is to be become with the manner of life of a forester], in a wild unfrequented region like this. Since (then) I truly am become no (longer) master of my own limbs, whose joints are shaken about by daily chases after wild beasts, therefore I will beg you as a favour to let me go just for one day to rest myself.' Amānusha-sañchāre, lit., 'untrodden by man.' Taylor MS. Sandhi-bandha or sandhi-bandhana, properly 'the ligament or tendon which binds the joints together.' Pra-sad in the causal ātāt., is 'to beg a favour [prasāda] from any one.'

² Lit., 'The opportunity is taken,' i.e., 'Now is a good opportunity: now is the time: I am all attention: [avadhānam kṛitam: Ch.] I have nothing else to do but to listen.' Amara gives as one of the meanings of kṣhāna; nirvyāpāra-sthiti or vyāpārāntara-rahita-sthiti, 'the state of having no other occupation,' i.e., 'leisure, opportunity.' The above is the reading of the oldest MS. and of Kāṭavema. Śaṅkara has gṛhītaḥ prajāyah, and the Devanāgarī MSS. gṛhīta ayam janah.

² 'Though observed to have evil effects, the chase has proved only an advantage in (the case of) our master.' Dṛishṭa-doshā may perhaps be translated 'regarded as a fault.' See the end of note 5, page 71. One MS. reads adṛishṭa-doshāpi, 'certainly hunting shows no ill-effects in our master,' etc.

Compare in the beginning of Act 6, kṣhīṇo 'pi nālakshyate, and Act 7, avatiṇo 'pi na lakshyate; also Hitopadeśa, line 2631, kāyah kṣhyamāno na lakshyate. Prāṇa-sāram, 'whose whole essence or substance consists of life and spirit.' Compare vajra-sdra, page 13, line 4. Bibharti, see page 23, note 1.

^१ 'The forest has its beasts of prey tracked, why then is it staid?' i.e., Why do you delay?' The first clause follows the reading of the Devanāgarī MSS.; the second is adopted from the oldest MS. (East-India House, 1060), supported by Kāṭavema. Kīmiti, Cf. Hitopadeśa, line 2618; Gīta Gov., ix., 7. Grihita = jñāta, 'found out,' 'discovered.' The Bengālī MSS. insert prachāra-sūchita, 'indicated by their tracks,' after 'grihita.'

where (is) there such a recreation as this?' Medas, 'adepts or fat,' or rather sthanulya-janaka-dhātu, 'a serous secretion causing fatness.' K. It performs the same functions to the flesh that the marrow does to the bones; its proper seat is in the belly [udaram]: hence the flesh is called medas-krit, 'the maker of adepts.' Chheda = nāśa, 'destruction,' 'removal,' 'reduction.' Cf. Gharma-chheda, 'the cessation of the heat.' Vikramorvaśī, Act 4. Utthāna-yogyam; the Bengālī MSS. read utsāha-yogyam, but utsāha is merely a synonym for utthāna, which is applied to any kind of manly exertion. Kāṭavema says the word here refers especially to the act of mounting on horse-back. Sattvānānām, i.e., jantūnām sinhādūnām, 'animals such as lions, etc.' It probably refers both to the hunters and the hunted. Vikṛitimat, 'affected with vikṛiti or vikāra, i.e., any emotion which causes a change from the prakṛiti, or natural and quiescent state of the mind [parityakta-prakṛitikan: K.]; See page 37, note 2. Bhaya-krodhayoh [satoḥ] = bhaye krodhe cha. Śāṅkara explains utkarsha by pratiśṭhā, 'fame, honour.' Vyasanam: In Manu, VII., 47. 50., hunting is designated as one of the ten vices [vyasanāni] of kings, and is, moreover, included amongst the four most pernicious [kāṣṭhalama].

² 'His Majesty has returned to his natural state [i.e., is no longer eager after the excitement of hunting]; but thou, wandering from forest to forest, wilt probably fall into the jaws of some old bear, greedy after a human nose.' Prakṛiti, 'the natural, quiescent, state of the soul,' as opposed to vikṛiti; see above. Āhīṇḍan: see p. 60, l. 2: Dāśa-kumār: p. 151, l. 6. Nara-nāsikā: Kāṭavema in explanation says, bhallūkā manushyānām nāsikām grihṇanti, 'bears seize the human nose.' The Bengálí read śṛigála-mṛiga-lolupasya, 'eager after a jackal or deer.' Richehassa is the Prākṛit for ṛikshasya, in accordance with Vararuchi, III., 30.

Wilson calls it a fabulous stone with fabulous properties, and mentions a fellow-stone called chandra-kānta, 'moon-beloved,' or chandra-maṇi, 'moon-gem.' It may be gathered from this passage that its properties resembled those of a glass lens, and it may be presumed that this instrument was not unknown to the Hindūs at the time when this play was

The following parallel sentiment is from Bhartri-Hari, II., 30 : Yad acetano'pi pādaiḥ sprīṣṭāḥ prajvalati savitur atikāntah, tat tejasvi puruṣah para-kṛita-nikṛitaṁ katham sahate, 'Since even the lifeless (stone) beloved of the sun, when touched by its rays, burns; how then can the man of spirit put up with an injury inflicted by another?' Abhibhava = tiraskāra, 'insult : ' K. The sun's rays, disturbing the natural state of the stone, are compared to the hunter's disturbing the hermitage and provoking its inhabitants. Vamanti : this is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. and of Kāṭavema. The Bengālī read sparsānukūlā api sūrya-kāntās, te hyanya-tejo-bhibhavad dahanti, 'Although the sun-crystals be grateful to the touch, yet, from the influence of other heat, they burn.'

‘free from people:’ Ś. and Ch. According to Pāṇini, II., 1. 6, nirmakshikam is an Aryayibhāva compound; but it is here used adjectively. The Prakrit equivalent follows Vararuchi III., 30. The phrase occurs again in the beginning of the 6th Act. Has makshikam here at all the sense of the French mouchard, ‘a spy,’ which is derived from mouche, ‘a fly?’

² Lit., ‘Thou hast not obtained the fruit of thy eyes, since the best of things worthy to be seen has not been seen by thee;’ i.e., Until you have seen Śakuntalā, you may consider your eyes as barren, and created in vain: when they have fallen upon this object, they may then be said to have yielded some fruit. So in the Vikramorvaśī, Act I, the King, speaking of Urvaśī, says, gasya netrayor abandhyayoh [not barren] pathi sthitā twam. Cf. also Gīta-Gov. ix., 6: Harim avalokaya sa-phalaya nayane, ‘look upon Hari (and) make thy eyes fruitful.’

plant' [swallow-wort, gigantic Aselepias, or Calotropis gigantea]. The Nava-mallikā was a delicate and tender plant [atikomala-pushpa-bheda : Ch.] which, as a creeper, depended on some other tree for support; the arka was a large and vigorous one [see Sir W. Jones, vol. v., page 102]: hence the former is compared to Śakuntalā, the latter to the sage Kaṇwa. Śankara explains arkopari by raver upari, 'upon the sun;' but, according to Sir W. Jones, ravi may be a synonym for the swallow-wort; and Śankara himself hints that some interpret arka by arka-pushpa. Kāṭavema explains the first line of the verse, but dismisses the second as too clear for any remark. Sura-yuvati; see page 43, note 2. According to Kāṭavema, kila is used vārtayām, 'it is said,' 'it is reported;' but Śankara interprets it by nischitam, 'certainly.' Śithilam = vrintach chyutam, 'fallen from the stalk.' Ch. The correspondence of the words in the first line with those in the second is noticeable; sura-yuvati with nava-mallikā, muni with arka, apatya with kuṣuma, ujjhita with śithila, adhigata with chyuta.

¹ 'Was she endowed with the properties of life by the Creator after delineating her [placing her] in a picture; or was she rather formed by the mind by a concentration [assemblage, selection] of lovely forms. She appears to me like a matchless [the last] creation of the loveliest of women [or like another creation of the goddess of beauty], when I recollect [recollecting] the omnipotence of the Creator, and her (graceful) person: ' i.e., When I call to mind the divine power of Brahmá, I cannot help regarding her as some faultless picture which he has painted and endowed with breath and life; when I reflect on her sylph-like figure, I am inclined to think she must have been formed in his mind by an ideal selection of the most beautiful forms. Or, it may simply mean,—Whatever was the method of her creation, whether she was formed by the hand, by first painting a beautiful figure and then breathing into it the principle of life; or by the mind, by collecting into one ideal model a combination of various exquisite forms; it is clear that when I reflect on the omnipotence of the Creator, and upon her loveliness, I must regard her as an unequalled beauty (or, as another creation of the goddess Lakshmi). Stri-ratna is explained by Śankara and Chandra-śekhara to mean Lakshmi; but it may be better to refer it to the antepura-stri-ratna mentioned before, as aparā = apūrvā, 'matchless,' 'peerless,' 'without a fellow;' na vidyate parā: K. and Ś. Chitre = ālekhye. Nireśya = vinjasya, 'having placed, fixed, committed.' Parikalpita = sampādita, or sampanna, 'endowed with,' 'provided with: ' K. Yoga, at the end of a compound, is used somewhat vaguely; sattva-yoga may mean 'a combination of the various properties of being and life.' Kāṭavoma observes that, 'as an object is lovely, so is it capable of being represented in a picture,' and refers to the verse in the 6th Act, beginning Yanyat sādhu na chitre syāt. This, he says, is tantamount to asserting that the figure of Śakuntalā was faultless. Rupoच्चया

= chandrady-upamāna-vastu-samucchaya, i.e., 'collecting together such models of beauty as the moon, etc., for the purpose of forming one ideal perfect form, by a selection from each : K. Manasā kri, or kalp, 'to form by means of the mind;' hence often simply, 'to imagine;' and hence, mano-kalpita, 'an idea.' There may be an allusion here to the mind-born sons of Brahṃā. Vidhinā = vidhātṛā. Kāṭavema observes that, 'being dissatisfied with the thought contained in the first line, he asserts in the second that her limbs were too delicate to have been fashioned by the hand in a picture; they must, therefore, have been formed in the mind.' Stri-ratna = stri-śreṣṭhā : Ch. Jātau jātau yad utkrīṣṭam tadāhi ratnam prachukshate, 'whatever is best of its kind that indeed they call ratna, 'a gem:' Ch. The connection of anuchintya with the dative case me is unusual, but not without precedent. The Bengāl MSS. read chitte for chitre.

Andviddham = asamutkirnam, 'unperforated:' K. Cf. Raghu-vanśa, i., 4, where he speaks of manau vajra-samutkirne sūtrasya gatih, 'the entrance of a thread into a gem perforated by the adamant.' The Bengālī MSS. read anātmuktam = aparīhitam, ākarād ānita mātṛam, 'not yet put on, only just drawn from the mine:' Ś. Phalam punyānām, i.e., 'the fruit of many virtuous acts in various former births come to its maturity' (parīnati-bhūtam): Ś. Akhaṇḍa = sampūrṇa, 'unimpaired,' 'entire.' The consequences of good deeds performed in former births is sometimes mixed with evil; but, in this comparison, it is said to be unalloyed: hence the form of Śakuntalā is called anagham, 'faultless,' i.e., pratyavāya-hetu-rahitam: K. Iha, i.e., asmin rūpa-vishaye, 'with reference to this form:' K. Samupasthāsyati = samprāpsyati, 'will attain,' 'arrive at.' This verse affords an example of the figure called 'Rūpaka,' i.e., A description of one object under the form of another, animate or inanimate, which it is poetically supposed to resemble. There are various modifications of this figure.

² 'Towards your honour what kind of feeling (was displayed) by her eyes?' Atha is used in asking a question: Ś. Bhavantam antareṇa = bhavan-nimittam: Ch.: = bhavan-madhye: Ś. The same expression occurs in the third Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the interpretation given is, bhavantam uddēśya, i.e., 'towards or with regard to you.' Antareṇa is similarly used in the Mālavikāgn. page 5, line 3. It governs an accusative case, by Pāṇini II., 3, 4. Drishṭi-rāga = chakshuh-prīti, 'the love of the eyes:' K. The above is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS., supported by K. and Ś.; but the Bengālī read chitta-rāga.

² According to Manu (vii., 131-133) a king might take a sixth part of liquids, flowers, roots, fruit, grass, etc.; but, even though dying with want, he was not to receive any tax from a Brāhmaṇ learned in the Vedas.

² 'That tribute which arises to kings from the (four) classes is perishable; but hermits [inhabitants of the woods] offer us a sixth part of (the merit of their) penance, (which is) imperishable.' Varṇebhyaḥ, 'the four classes of Bráhmans, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śúdras:' K., Ś., and Ch. Hence it would appear that the Bráhmans were liable to some kind of tribute as well as the other classes, though it is clear from Manu that they were in most cases exempt. The Bengálí have dhanam for phalam. Dadati; the third conjugation rejects the nasal in the third person plural.

³ 'We have accomplished our object,' i.e., in gaining an audience of the king: Ś. IIṁta, an exclamation of pleasure: Ś.

² 'Oh! the confidence (inspired by the sight) of his person, majestic though (it be)! But this is quite natural in this king (who) is very little inferior to a Rishi.' Diptimat = tejaswin, 'splendid,' hence 'majestic.' Vīśwasanyata, 'the state of being confided in.' Upapanna, 'fit,' 'proper,' 'agreeable to reason.' Cf. Vikramorvaśī, Act 2, upapannam viśeshanam asya vdyoh. Rīshi-kalpe, 'resembling a Rishi, but with a degree of inferiority,' such is the force of kalpa in composition. Dushyanta was a Rājarshi, and therefore one degree below a Rishi : See page 43, note 2, in the middle; and page 38, note 3. The Devanāgarī reading is rishibhyo nātibhinne rājani, but the Bengālī is here preferable.

It is difficult to see how this last sense can apply. Rakshá-yogád : See p. 79, line 2. Cf. Manu, vii., 144. 'The highest virtue of a king is the protection of his subjects.' Chárana-dvandva = gandharbamiṭhuna, 'pair of Gandharbas, or celestial choristers.' These beings were the musicians or minstrels of Indra's heaven, just as the Apsaras were the dancers and actresses : and their business was to amuse the inhabitants of Swarga by singing the praises of gods, saints and heroes. Chárana is any bard or herald. According to Kátavema kevalam = eva, 'certainly.' This verse affords an example of the figure called 'Vyatireka,' i.e., A description of the difference of two things compared in some respects to each other : Ś.

¹ 'The friend of Indra.' Bala-bhit, 'Indra' who crushes armies with his thunder-bolt. Sakhi at the end of a compound (like rátri, akshi, etc.) changes its final to a, and becomes a noun of the first class. Pán. V., 4, 87, 91, 98, 102. Indra is the chief of the Suras or secondary gods, being inferior to the gods of the Triad; and corresponds to the Jove or Jupiter Tonans of classical mythology. In his lordship over Swarga, or paradise, he might be supplanted by any one who could perform a hundred Áśwa-medhas or horse-sacrifices : see p. 44, note 1. He and the other Suras were for ever engaged in hostilities with their half-brothers, the demons called Asuras or Daityas, the giants or Titans of Hindú mythology, who were the children of Káśyapa by Diti, as the Suras were by Aditi : see p. 22, note 1. On such occasions the gods seem to have depended much upon the assistance they received from the heroes of the earth, such as Dushyanta, Purúravas, etc.

all the Devanāgarī and some of the Bengālī MSS. The old Bengālī [Bodleian 234] has satrena, and some begin the verse with upakārini sarvesham, 'the helper of all.' Yukta-rūpam: Cf. page 15, line 1. Āpannābhaya-satreshu = āpad-gatānām bhaya-trāṇe: Ś. Dikṣitāh = kṛita-pratishṭhāh, 'consecrated.'

² 'At first it was overflowing; (but) now, by the account of the Rākshasas, not even a drop is left:' this is the reading of the Devanāgarī MSS., supported by K. Parivāha is either 'an inundation,' or 'a channel for carrying off an excess of water:' the Bengālī have aparibādham, 'unchecked.' Vṛitāntena = nāma-grahanena, 'by the mention.'

³ 'On the fourth day, (which is now) coming, [i.e., on the fourth day after to-day] the ceremony [fast] named 'Putra-piṇḍa-pālana' [i.e., cherishing of the body of a son] will take place: thereat [on that occasion] certainly we ought to be honoured-with-a-visit by the long-lived-one [by your Majesty, long may you live!]' Most of the Bengālī MSS. read putra-piṇḍa-pāra;

but Ch. substitutes pālana, and interprets the phrase by pura-deha-pushti-prada: Ś. gives the same interpretation, but reads paryupāsana for pālana: 'Pinda, deha-mātre iti Medinī,' 'According to Medinī pinda has the sense of body': Ś. and Ch.: and this sense is given by Wilson. Putra refers to the king in his relation to the queen-mother. The Devanāgarī reading of this passage [pravṛitta-pārāṇa upavāsa, 'a fast which has come to an end.'] is not very satisfactory. Upavāsa = vrata, 'a religious ceremonial accompanied with fasting, but not necessarily a fast': K. and Ch. observe that one name for this ceremonial was putra-rāja, and that it consisted in offering various presents to the young king of sweetmeats, clothes, etc., just as might be done in the present day on the occasion of a birth-day. Dirghāyushā: See page 8, note 2. Vayam is used by the same rule that the plural devīnām is employed above. Sambhāvayitavyā: See page 25, note 1, at end.

² 'Stand in the middle, like Trisanku.' The story of this monarch is told at length in the Rāmāyana, I., LVII. to LX. [see also page 42, note 1, of this book]. He is there described as a just and pious prince of the solar race, who aspired to celebrate a great sacrifice, hoping thereby to ascend to heaven in his mortal body. He first requested the sage Vāśiṣṭha to officiate for him; but, being refused, he then applied to the sage's hundred sons, by whom he was cursed and degraded to the condition of a Chāṇḍāla. In this pitiable state he had recourse to Viśvāmitra, who undertook to conduct the sacrifice, and invited all the gods to be present; they, however, refused to attend. Upon this the enraged Viśwámitra, by his own power, transported Trisanku to the skies, whither he had no sooner arrived than he was hurled down again, head-foremost, by Indra and the gods; but, being arrested in his downward course by Viśwámitra, remained suspended between heaven and earth, forming a constellation in the southern hemisphere. The story is differently told in some of the Purāṇas [Wilson's translation of the Vishṇu-P., page 371, note.] They and the Hari-vanśa describe Trisanku as a wicked prince, guilty of three heinous sins [śanku]. Śankara adopts this view of his character, and calls him Kṛita-bahutara-malina-karmā rājā. Antarā = tapovana-sva-nagarayor madhye, 'between the hermitage and the city.' The facetious allusion to Trisanku is quite characteristic of the Vidūshaka and affords an example of the 'Vyāhāra alankāra:' Ś. and Ch.

¹ 'The pupil of the sacrificing-(brāhmaṇ) bearing kuśa-grass.' Yajamāna is for yajvan, 'a sacrificer.' See Raghu-v., xviii., 11 : In Telugu it has acquired the sense of 'master.' Compare tatah praviśato Bharata-śiṣya : Vikram., Act 3. Dr. B. reads yajamānah śiṣyah on the authority of only one MS. The translation must then be 'a pupil occupied about a sacrifice.' The pupil, or religious student, certainly, did not officiate himself. Śiṣhya, in fact, denotes a Brahmachāri, or young brāhmaṇ in that state of pupilage through which every brāhmaṇ had to pass, living in the house of some superior brāhmaṇ, who was his preceptor; and who, in return for instruction given, required his assistance in various menial offices, in collecting the materials for sacrifice, and in asking alms. 'Let the student carry water-pots, flowers, cow-dung, fresh earth and kuśa-grass, as much as may be useful to his preceptor; let him bring wood for the oblation to fire; let him go begging through the whole district,' etc. Manu, ii., 176 et seq. Kuśān : see page 18, note 1.

² 'Since on his highness having merely entered the hermitage, our rites have become free from molestation.' So read the oldest MSS. supported by K. The others praviṣṭa evāśramam tatrābharati, etc. The student need hardly be reminded that praviṣṭa-mātre, etc. is in the loc. case absolute.

antareṇa: Ś.) in the same manner as a threatening roar often suffices to scare those who hear it. Cf. Pratīśabdo hi harer hinasti nāgān. Vikram. Act I. Hunkāra is the roar of any fierce animal. The figure by which the sound of the bow is thus designated is called Utprekshā, or hyperbolical comparison: Ś. and Ch. So Bhaṭṭi (x., 44) in giving an example of this figure, describes a mountain as stretching out its huge body between heaven and earth to protect the land from the inroads of the sea.

Manu, iv., 57; ii., 143.

^२ 'Let her be nursed with care; for she is the (very) breath of his reverence (Kāṇva), the head of (our) society. I also will just deliver into the hands of Gautamī for her the soothing water consecrated in the sacrifice.' Upāchar, 'to wait upon a sick person,' 'administer remedies,' etc. Uchchhvasitam = prāṇāh, 'breath:' = jīvanam, 'life,' i.e., as precious as his own life: Compare Lam. iv., 20, 'The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken,' etc.; also Kumāra-s., vii., 4. Vaitānika = vitānakhyā-yaga-sambandhi, 'belonging to the sacrifice called vitāna,' 'sacred,' 'holy.' Vitāna is also 'the sacrificial hearth on which the sacred fire was kept.' The śānttyudakam may have been a kind of holy water, like the 'eau bénite' of the Roman Catholics. Gautamī, the name of the sister of Kāṇva: K.

^३ The Vishkambha or Vishkambhaka, according to the Sāhitya-darpana (p. 146), and Kāṭavema's commentary on the opening speech of the 2nd. Act of this play, is an introductory monologue or dialogue, so called from its concisely compressing [root skumbh with vi] into a short space an account of those subordinate parts of the plot, which are not enacted before the audience, but are to be taken for granted as having happened before the Act, or as about to happen after it; and a knowledge of which is essential to the comprehending of the action of the remainder of the play: [Vṛitta-vartishyamāṇānām kathāśāśānām nidarśakah, sankshiptārthastu vishkambhak: See also page 62, note 3 at end.] In the case of a monologue, it may be suspected that these terms may be identified with the speaker, but when more than one actor is concerned, the direction at the end [nishkrāntau, vishkambhakah] would seem to indicate that the term belongs to the dialogue itself, and not to the speaker of it. The Vishkambha may occur at the beginning of any of the Acts, even of the 1st. immediately after the Prastāvanā [ddāv ankasya darśitah]. It may be spoken by two out of the three sets of characters into which the dramatis-personæ of an Indian play are divided, viz., the inferior [nīcha] who speak Prākṛit anuddāttoktyā 'in the low tone'; and the middling [madhya, madhyama] who speak Sanskrit udāttoktyā 'in the high tone'; but not by the chief [pradhāna], such as the hero, etc. Again, it may be spoken by one character in the form of a soliloquy, or by two in the form of a dialogue; and either by characters of the middle class only, when it is called Śuddha, i.e., puro; or by those of the middle and lower combined, when it is called Mīśra or Sankīrṇa, i.e., mixed: [Madhyena madhyamābhyām rā pūtrābhyām samprayojitah śuddhah syāt tu sankīrṇo nīcha-madhyama-kalpitaḥ]. Sometimes the characters are exclusively those of the inferior class, who speak Prākṛit; sometimes more than two appear on the stage at once, in which cases it is properly called Praveśaka. It must, however, be borne in mind that the terms Praveśaka and Vishkambhaka are regarded as identical by the MSS. and Commentators [Vishkambha eva svyaktaiḥ praveśaka iti smṛitah: K. praveśaka eva vishkambhakah: Ś.]; although the Sāhitya-darpaṇa restricts the former title to the cases above specified, and limits it still further by applying it to an interlude only [Praveśako anuddāttoktyā nīcha-pūtra-prayojitah, anka-dvayāntar vijneyah śesham vishkambhake yathā]. There can be little doubt, too, that the term Praveśaka, like Vishkambhaka, may be sometimes applied to the speaker in the case of a monologue. From the circumstance that the opening speech in the 2nd. Act of this play is called a Praveśaka by K. (unsupported, however, by the MSS.), we may infer that the speaker was not obliged to leave the stage at the end of the scene. It is possible, however, that he might have withdrawn and re-entered, as in the 5th. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the opening soliloquy is styled Praveśaka both in the MSS. and in the Calcutta edition. Doubtless, this title may with as much reason be applied to the Vidūshaka's soliloquy in the one play, as in the other. According to the rule thus propounded by the Śāhit-darp., the present monologue is a Śuddha-Vishkambha. In the Bengālī MSS. it is termed a Praveśaka. Dr. Boehtlingk justly remarks that the modern epithet Śuddha should be omitted in the text.

॥ ततः प्रविशति समदनावस्थो राजा ॥

राजा ॥ सचिन्तं निःश्वस्य ॥

made of sugar-cane, the string consisting of bees, and with five arrows, [whence his name Pancha-vāṇa] each tipped with the blossom of a flower, which pierce the heart through the five senses. The names of the five arrows (according to Bharata, cited by Ś.) are—1. Harshaṇa, 'Gladdener;' 2. Prahasana, 'Exhilarater;' 3. Mohana, 'Fascinator;' 4. Mūrchehkhana, 'Sense-destroyer;' 5. Vikarshaṇa, 'Distracter.' According to Kāṭavema, the names of the five flowers which form the points of these arrows, and which may be supposed to possess properties similar to that implied in the names of the arrows themselves, are—1. the Aravinda, a kind of lotus [Nymphæa Nelumbo]; 2. the Aśoka; 3. the Śirisha; 4. the Chūta or Āmra, i.e., the Mango; 5. the Utpala or blue lotus. But according to Sir W. Jones [Hymn to Kāmadeva, vol. xiii., p. 239] they are—1. the Champaka; 2. the Chūta or Āmra; 3. the Keśara or Nāga-keśara; 4. the Ketaka; 5. the Vilwa or Bela. In both lists the Chūta occurs, and is considered the favourite arrow of the god: hence the frequent allusions to it in the Gīta-govinda (iii., 12; iv., 6), and hence in Act VI its epithet pañcābhyaṭhika 'chief of the five.' This epithet is explained by Śaṅkara to mean 'a sixth arrow, in addition to the five,' which interpretation is more in accordance with the passage in the 2nd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, kimuta upavāna-sahakṛair, etc. It is clear that some authorities do not include the Mango in the list. The Gīta-govinda (x., 14) mentions five other flowers as occasionally employed by the god, viz., the Badhūka, the Madhūka, the blue Lotus, the Tila, and the Kuṇḍa. Another account includes the Mallikā or jasmīn amongst the five; so that it is difficult to fix the names with any certainty. In Hindū erotic poetry, cooling properties are always attributed to the rays of the moon, which are said to distil nectar; hence some of his names—śīta-mayūkha, hima-rāsmi, hima-kara, amṛita-sū, sudhā-nidhi, etc. On the other hand, the heating effect of these rays on the lover is often alluded to, thus, śītāśus tapanah: Gīt.-Gov. ix., 10; iv., 7; v. 3: Compare in the Vikramorvaśī, nandana-vana-vātdh śikhina iva [Act 2]; and pādās te śaśinah sukhayanti, etc. [end of Act iii.] Sārtha = samūha; properly, a caravan: Hitopadeśa, l. 2574. Ayathartham = viparīta-kriyam, 'having a contrary effect.' Dvayam: see p. 91, note 1. Garbhair: see p. 17, l. 8. Vajra-sāri: see p. 13, l. 4.

Is it becoming of you, drawing your bow to your very ear, (to) discharge (your) arrows even upon me (your votary)?' Vows were to the bodiless god of love, what the oblations (upon which they were supposed to feed and fatten) were to the other gods. Sankalpa = ichehld, 'wish.' Śravanopakanthe ākrishya = karnāntikam āniya, 'drawing the string of the bow back as far as the ear.' Upakantha, 'near,' lit., 'near the neck;' Cf. Raghu-v., ix., 57, ākarna-kriṣṭam rāṇam. Yukta = uchita. The passage from Bhagavan Kāmadeva (page 100) to rāṇa-moksha is given on the authority of the Taylor and my own Bombay Devanāgarī MS., supported by Śankara and Chandra-śekhara, and by all the Bengālī MSS. The Mackenzie MS. has part of the passage, but Colebrooke's omits it altogether.

Compare Pāśchān-natā guru-nitambatayā asyāḥ pada-panktīḥ: Vikram., Act 4: and Śrōṇi-bhārdā alasa-gamanā: Megh., verse 81. Granted that the heat of the two influences of love and the hot season [or the heat induced by the prevalence either of love or of the sultry weather] be equal, still disorder is not inflicted on maidens by the hot weather in such a charming manner: i.e., Since the disorder apparent in the person of Śakuntalā only contributes to her beauty, it is clearly not caused by the hot weather, but by love. Uśra: see p. 96, note 4, and Sir W. Jones, vol. v., p. 154. Two other names for this plant are jalāsaya, 'growing in water,' and avaddha, 'allaying fever;' the slender fibres of it are now known by the name of Khaskhas and are used in India in trellises for cooling the air. Prasithila = adrīḍha: Ś. = komala, 'withered:' Ch. The repetition of kshāma may imply 'becoming gradually every day more and more emaciated;' as Priyamvadā had said anudivasam parihiyase angaiḥ. Kūṭhinya-mukta: the Bengālī have yukta, but the loss of firmness in the breasts would rather be a sign of debility. Prakāma: Ś. interprets this by atyartham, 'excessively.' So the commentator on Gīt.-Gov., iv., 17; vii., 40, explains nikāma by atiśayena. Similarly kāma has the sense of nīchitam, 'certainly.' May the meaning not be 'stoop of their own accord,' i.e., 'languidly,' 'listlessly,' from their being allowed to fall without any effort being made to raise them? Śoṣaṇena = śoṣakena, i.e., By the wind that dries up the leaves and causes them to fall: [patra-pātaka-vāyunā] K., Ś. Mādhavī, a large and beautiful creeper bearing white fragrant flowers, [Gartnera racemosa] to which constant allusion is made in the plays: see page 113, note 2.

¹ 'Then if (it be) approved by you, so act, that I may be commiserated by the royal sage. Otherwise most certainly (it will happen that you will have to) pour out for me water with sesamum-seed;' i.e., That you will have to celebrate my funeral obsequies. Oblations to the manes of the deceased were offered by the nearest surviving relations soon after death, and were repeated once, or, according to some, twice in every year. They were supposed to be necessary to secure the residence of the souls of the dead in the world appropriated to the manes. The ceremony itself was called Śrāddha, and generally consisted in offering a cake made of rice and milk [pinda-nirvāpana]; or in pouring out water [udaka-dāna, udaka-kriyā]; or water and sesamum-seed mixed. In the latter case it was called tilodaka-dāna, tila-tarpana, etc. The ceremony as performed by Brāhmanas is described in Manu, iii., 203, etc.; see especially iii., 223: Dattvā sapavitram tilodakam, 'Having poured out water with sesamum-seed and kuśa-grass.' Kātavema refers in illustration to a verse towards the end of the 6th. Act of this play, where Dushyanta says Nūnam prasūti-vikalena mayā prasiktam, dhautāśru-śeṣham udakam pitarah pivanti, 'In all probability my (deceased) ancestors are (now) drinking the only offering-of-water that is left to them (consisting of) glistening tears poured forth by me destitute of posterity.' Sinchātām = nirvapatam: K. Vartethām; vrit may have the sense of 'to behave,' 'to act.'

² 'Why need we wonder at this, since the constellation Viśākhā courts [goes after] the young-moon?' i.e., If the constellation Viśākhā [or the sixteenth lunar asterism, which is sometimes written in the dual Viśākhe, as containing two stars] is eager for an union with the Moon, why need we wonder at Sakuntalá's desire to be united with a prince of the lunar race? Śásánka-lekhá is properly 'a digit of the moon,' or the moon in its most beautiful form when quite young. A complete revolution of the moon, with respect to the stars, being made in twenty-seven days, odd hours; the Hindús divide the heavens into twenty-seven constellations [asterisms] or lunar stations, one of which receives the moon for one day in each of his monthly journeys. As the Moon [Chandra] is considered to be a masculine deity, the Hindús fable these twenty-seven constellations as his wives, and personify them as the daughters of Daksha. Of these twenty-seven wives (twelve of whom give names to the twelve months) Chandra is supposed to show the greatest affection for the fourth (Rohini) but each of the others, and amongst them Viśákhá, is represented as jealous of this partiality, and eager to secure the Moon's favour for herself. Dushyanta probably means to compare himself to the Moon (he being of the lunar race: p. 14, note 2) and Śakuntalá to Viśákhá. The selection of Viśákhá, rather than Rohini, may perhaps be explained by a reference to p. 5, l. 1, where we learn that the summer-season had barely set in at the period when the events of the drama were supposed to be taking place. If therefore the season corresponded to the middle of May, the month would probably be Vaiśákha, and Viśákhá would, therefore, be appropriately chosen before Rohini. This passage may also be interpreted, but not so consistently with the fable, by referring viśákhe to the two female friends, and śásánka-lekhá to Śakuntalá. The meaning would then be, 'It is not to be wondered at that these two friends should follow Śakuntalá and assist in carrying out her schemes, any more than that the two stars of Viśákhá should go after the young moon.' Anuvartete = anusratah: K.

¹ '(Your) "unobservedly" will require thought, (your) "quickly" (is) easy.' This use of iti in quoting previous words is noticeable.

The same word occurs at the end of this act, where allusion is made to the flowery couch of Śakuntalā, śarīra-lulitā, 'which her body had pressed:' One sense of the root lul is certainly to 'adhere,' 'stick,' 'cleave:' The Devanāgarī all have anabhilulita with the same meaning, unsupported by K. and the other scholiasts, and the oldest Bengālī MSS. Through emaciation and disuse of the bow (Cf. p. 70, l. 7, with p. 68, l. 1) the callosities on the fore-arm usually caused by the bow-string, were not sufficiently prominent to prevent the bracelet from slipping down from the wrist to the elbow, when the arm was raised to support the head. This is a favourite idea with Kālidāsa to express the attenuation caused by love. Compare Megha-dūta, verso 2: Kanaka-valaya-bhrāṇśa-rikta-prakoṣṭhah, Verse 66. HARINĪ (variety of ATYASHTĪ) containing seventeen syllables to the half-line, each half-line being alike.

‘having the fore-arm bare by the falling of the golden bracelet.’ The Bengálí have anatilulita-jyá ghátámkád, agreeing with mani-bandhanát, which would appear at first sight to be the better reading. I have followed Kátavema and the Devanágari MSS. in making this compound agree with valayam, and I believe there is no other way of translating it satisfactorily. It may, however, as Kátavema observes, be taken adverbially. Mani-bandhana ‘the wrist,’ ‘the place of binding jewels.’

² ‘This very injunction [suggestion] of my friend is weighed (in my mind),’ i.e. I must consider before I can consent to it. This is the reading of the two oldest MSS. One, however, has sahi for sahí.

² 'That very one, O timid one, from whom thou apprehendest a refusal, stands pining for an union with thee. The lover may or may not win Fortune, (but) how, being beloved (by her), should he be difficult-to-be-won by Fortune?' Śrī = Lakṣmī, 'the goddess of beauty and fortune,' here identified with Śakuntalā or with the object of the lover's hopes and aspirations. The commentators do not throw light on this passage. The meaning seems to be, 'There is always a doubt whether the suitor will gain favour with Fortune, or with the beautiful maiden who may be the object of his love, but when it is certain that he is beloved by her, how can she have any difficulty in gaining him? for there surely will be no doubt of his being willing to accept her favours, however uncertain may be her encouragement of his advances.' The verse which follows this in the Bengālī MSS. is omitted in all the Devanāgarī, and is most probably spurious.

chitena, and the Calcutta edition pulakānchitena, meaning the same. Horripilation, or the erection of the hair of the body (pulaka, roma-kantaka, romānchana) is considered by the Hindús to be an indication of exquisite delight or pleasurable emotion. The Dictionary does not give this sense to kantaka, but it is so used in Vikramorvaśī, Act I., mama angam sa-roma- kantakam ankuritam.

² 'The day is not (yet) cool.' Aparinirvāna = anapagata-tīrđtapah, 'having its great heat not yet passed off.' 'It was still noon.' Ś. Some MSS. have anirvāna, and others apa-nirvāna [= anirvāna, nirvāna-rahita].

received the approval of their fathers [been approved by their fathers].¹ The Gándharva marriage is one of the forms of marriage described in Manu iii, 22, et seq. It is a marriage proceeding entirely from love [kāma-sambhava] or the mutual inclination [anyonyechchhá] of a youth and maiden, and concluded without any ceremonies and without consulting relatives: see especially Manu, iii., 32. Gándharva = paraspara-bhāshayá kṛto vivāha: K. ¹ '[Behind the scenes.] O female-chakravāka, bid farewell to thy mate: the night is at hand [arrived].' Chakravāka-radhakā [Pāṇini, VII., 4, 13] i.e., the Chakravāki or female of the Ruddy goose, commonly called the Brahmanī duck (Anas Casarea). The male and female of these birds keep together during the day (whence one of their names, dvaṇḍva-chara, 'going in pairs') and are, like turtle-doves, patterns of constancy and connubial affection; but the legend is that they are doomed to pass the night apart (whence the name rātri-viśeṣha-gāmin) in consequence of a curse pronounced upon them by some saint whom they had offended. Accordingly, as soon as night commences, they take up their station on opposite banks of a river, and call to each other in piteous cries. The name rathāṅga or ratha-pāda, 'chariot-footed,' sometimes given to them, indicates some peculiar formation of the feet. Constant allusion is made to their habits: thus in the Vikram., Act 4, Sahacharīm dūre matvā viraushi sanutukah. Cf. also Meghadūta, verse 82, and Raghu-vansā, viii., 55.

(for I see that) it is the great Rishi Durvāsas, easily-provoked to anger. After uttering such a curse, he has turned back with a step tremulous, bounding and difficult to be checked through its impetuosity.' Śūnya-hṛdayā lit., 'empty-hearted,' one whose heart is engrossed with some other object. Vega-chatula, etc. : This is the reading of the Mackenzie MS., and seems to have been that of K. All the Devanāgarī have upphulla, for the Sanskrit utphula from the root sphul, 'to leap,' allied to sphur. Utphūla from the same root is given by Wilson, and both sphula and sphura, but not utphula, which is a legitimate word. As to the Prākṛit upphulla, it may be observed that many consonants in Prākṛit are too weak to sustain themselves singly, and that if elision does not take place, the consonant is sometimes doubled. Thus sukkha, or suha may be written for the Sanskrit sukha, and nihitta or nihia for nihita : Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 276, 3. The oldest Bengālī MS. has avirala-pādoddhārayā, and the Calcutta edition avirala-pāda-twarayā gatyā. As to Durvāsas, he is a Saint or Muni, represented by the Hindū poets as excessively choleric, and inexorably severe. The Purāṇas and other poems contain frequent accounts of the terrible effects of his imprecations on various occasions, the slightest offence being in his eyes deserving of the most fearful punishment. On one occasion he cursed Indra, merely because his elephant let fall a garland which he had given to this god; and in consequence of this imprecation all plants withered, men ceased to sacrifice, and the gods were overcome in their wars with the demons : see Vishṇu-Pur., p. 70. With regard to the title Maharshi : see p. 38, note 3, and p. 43, note 2.

guided as it were through their different states:' i.e., by the alternations of these luminaries, the vicissitudes to be expected in human life are indicated.
One of the names of the Moon is Ośadhī-patih, 'lord of the annual or medicinal plants.' He is so called from some influence which he is supposed to exercise over the growth of such plants. Compare Deut., xxxiii., 14, forth by the moon.' Oshadhī is explained in Manu, i. 46, as phala-pákāntā, 'a plant which dies after the ripening of its fruit.' Asta is the name for the mountain in the West, behind which, in Hindú poetry, the sun and moon are always supposed to set, as Udaya is the name of that over which they are supposed to rise. Arka is a name of the god Súrya, 'the Sun.' He is represented in Hindú mythology, as seated in a chariot drawn by seven green horses, or by one horse with seven heads [whence his name Saptásiva], and before him is a lovely youth without legs, who acts as his charioteer, and who is called Aruna, or the Dawn personified. Aruna is the son of Kaśyapa and Vinatā, and elder brother of Garuda. His imperfect form may be allusive to his gradual or partial appearance, his legs being supposed to be lost, either in the darkness of the departing night, or in the blaze of the coming day. The sentiment expressed in this verse is paralleled by the speech of the Chándála in the Mṛichchhakatī [p. 321, l. 4], thus translated by Prof. Wilson, 'In heaven itself the sun and moon are not free from change [vipattim labhete]: how should we poor weak mortals hope to escape it in this lower world? One man rises but to fall, another falls to rise again,' etc.

The Bengālī and K. insert me before āśochantiyā, and read parigrīhitām for pratirakṣitām.

Ś.: see p. 96, note 3. Agni-saraṇam = agnyāgāram, 'the place where the sacred fire was kept ;' = yajna-śālā, 'hall of sacrifice.' Schol. Chézy. Fire was an important object of veneration with the ancient Hindūs, as with the ancient Persians. Perhaps the chief worship recommended in the Vedas is that of Fire and the Sun.

Brāhmins when they married and became householders, unless they intended giving up their sacerdotal office, kindled with two pieces of the hard Śamī, Arani, or Khadira wood, or with a piece of the Śamī and Aśwattha wood [see page 23, note 2], a sacred fire [homāgni, grihyāgni, hutaḥgni] which they deposited in a cavity or hearth called Kunda or Vitāṇa, in some hallowed part of the house; or, like the Persians, in some sacred building proper for the purpose [called agnyāgāra, Manu, iv., 58, homa-śālā, agni-griha], and which they carefully kept lighted throughout their lives, using it first for their nuptial ceremony [Manu, ii., 231; iii., 171; Sir W. Jones, vol. iii., 127], and for the regular morning and evening oblations to Agni [homa, hotra], performed by dropping clarified butter, etc. into the flame, with prayers and invocations [Manu, xi., 41; iii., 81, 84, 85. See also p. 133, note 1 of this book]; for the performance of solemn sacrifices [Manu, ii., 143]; for the Śrāddha or obsequies to departed parents and ancestors [Manu, iii., 212, et seq. See also page 112, note 1 of this book]; and finally, for the funeral pile. The perpetual maintenance of this sacred fire was called agni-hotra, agnyādhāna, agni-rakshana; and the consecration of it, agnyādheya [Manu, ii., 143]; and the Brāhman or householder who maintained it, agni-hotrin, dhītāgni, agnyādhīta, sāgnika. At Benares even to this day, according to Sir W. Jones, many agni-hotras are continually blazing. Sometimes the householder did not himself attend to the sacred fire, but engaged an officiating priest [ritvij, yajamāna, agnidhra: see p. 95, note 1; p. 96, note 2]. The Brāhman who did not maintain a fire was called anāhitāgni [Manu, xi., 38]. According to Manu, iii., 212 (with commentary) there were three periods when he was necessarily without it, viz., just before his investiture, before his marriage after the completion of his studentship, and at the death of his wife; but the usual daily oblation was then to be placed in the hand of a holy Brāhman, who is said to be one form of fire [see p. 74, note 3; p. 49, note 2]. Sacred fire is sometimes considered to be of three kinds [tretā, 'the triad of fires']: 1. Gārhapatya, nuptial or household; 2. Āhavanīya, sacrificial, taken from the preceding,

This was probably a mangala-puṣkpa-mayī sraj, or garland made of auspicious flowers, to be suspended round the neck of Śakuntalā, such as that described in Raghu-vanśa, vi., 84. Śankara and the Bengālī read kēsara-guṇḍāh or kēsara-chūrnāh, and Śankara observes that the fragrant dust of this plant is much used by women in making unguents [udvartanāni].

² 'Whilst I also will compound auspicious unguents composed of Mṛiga-rochanā, holy earth, (and) Dūrbā sprouts.' Mṛiga-rochanā is said to be either the concrete bile of a deer or an exudation from his head, used as a medicine, a yellow dye or a perfume: see Wilson, under Gorochanā. The latter word is the reading of the Bengālī MSS. Tīrtha-mṛttikā is earth brought from tīrthas or holy bathing-places: see p. 16, note 2. Dūrbā, 'bent-grass' [Agrostis Linearis, Panicum Dactylon], a kind of sacred grass, not quite so sacred as darbhā, but possessing many virtues, and used for the argha: see p. 35, note 3. Sir W. Jones says of it, 'Its flowers in their perfect state, are among the loveliest objects in the vegetable world, and appear, through a lens, like minute rubies and emeralds. It is the sweetest and most nutritious pasture for cattle, and its usefulness, added to its beauty, induced the Hindús to believe that it was the mansion of a benevolent nymph.' The Atharva-Veda celebrates it thus: 'May Dúrbá, which rose from the water of life, which has a hundred roots and a hundred stems, efface a hundred of my sins, and prolong my existence on earth for a hundred years.' Samdambhana is the act of smearing the body with coloured perfumes, such as saffron, sandal, etc.; the plural is here used for the unguents themselves, which are said to be mangala, 'conducive to good fortune.' The Bengálí have samdambhanam.

² 'Truly these Rishis who are to go to Hastinápura are being called.' Śabdāyyanto (so written by Ch.) = dhūyanto: Ś. and Ch. It is the passive form of the nominal śabdāyate: Śankara has śabdāyanto, which could only mean 'they sound,' 'make a noise;' Pānini, iii., 1, 17. Hastinápura, [lit., 'the city of elephants'] was the ancient Delhi, situated on the Ganges, and the residence of Dushyanta.

The Bengālī MSS. have kṛita-majjand. Swasti-vāchanikābbhik is here an epithet of the women who make the swasti-vāchanam, i.e. (according to K.) 'a gift of flowers, sweet-meats [prahelaka], fruit, or any eatables presented with good wishes and prayers for the blessing of some deity.' It is especially the blessing which is coupled with the gift. In the present case the hallowed rice which they held in their hands, might have constituted the offering which accompanied the swasti-vāchanam. In the Vikramorvaśī the Vidūshaka is propitiated by a swasti-vāchanam (or -nakam), consisting of a modaka-śardāva, 'dish of sweet-meats.' Birthday-gifts, wedding-presents, Christmas-boxes, etc., with their accompanying compliments, are the swasti-vāchanaka of our day. The words odyana and odyanaka seem to have a similar signification, though without any necessary implication of good-wishes. Nivāra, 'wild-rice,' Manu, vi., 16.

Compare Kumāra-s., v. 69. Lākṣhā = alaktā or alaktaka, 'lac,' 'a red dye,' prepared from an insect, analogous to the cochineal insect. This minute red insect is found in great numbers in the Palāśa, Indian fig-tree, and some other trees. It punctures the bark, whence exudes a resinous milky juice, with which it surrounds itself in a kind of nest, and which when dry may be broken off, and used for various purposes. This hardened and reddened substance is variously called gum-lac, shell-lac, stick-lac, etc. Āparva, etc. = parva-bhāga-par-yantam udgataṅ. Parva-bhāga = maṇi-bandha, 'the wrist': K. Ā, 'as far as,' generally requires the ablat. c. of a word not in composition, as āmami-bandhāt pāṇiṅ, 'the hand as far as [from] the wrist.' It may sometimes have the sense of 'from,' as in ādarsandāt, 'from the first sight.' Tat-kisalaya, etc.: the Bengālī and Ś. read nah, 'to us,' for tat, and kisalaya-chohkhāya-parisparadhikṛiṅ, 'rivalling the hue of young shoots.' According to Kavikanthahāra, quoted by Ś., ornaments are divided into four kinds:—1. Āvedhya, as ear-rings, etc.; 2. Bandhantya or Vedhya, as flowers, etc.; 3. Kshepya or Prakshepya, as anklets, foot-ornaments, etc.; 4. Āropya, as necklaces, garlands, etc.

The Brāhman was required to divide his life into four stages or orders [āśrama]. The Sāhitya-darpana (p. 190) adduces this verse as an example of śīrvāda, 'benediction,' but reads (as also do the Bengālī) patyur for bhartur, and putram for sutam. ² '[Pronounces a blessing in the metre of the Rik, i.e., according to the usual metre of the Rig-veda.] Let these fires taken-from-the-sacred hearth [vaidāns] whose places are fixed round the altar, fed with (consecrated) wood, having darbha [kūśa] grass strewn around the margin, destroying sin by the perfume of the oblations, purify thee.' The Rig-veda is the most celebrated of the four most ancient sacred books of the Hindūs. It consists of metrical hymns or prayers termed

Verse 88. TRISHTUP CHATUSH-PADĀ, a form of VAIDIK metre, consisting of four times eleven syllables, the first and third half-lines resembling the VĀTORMĪ, and the second and fourth, the ŚĀLINĪ variety of TRISHTUBH. In the second, however, the first syllable is short.

In the Rig-veda, i., 59, 5, the first pāda is exactly like the first in the above scheme, but the other pādas are arranged differently, as far at least as the seventh syllable. Kālidāsa, accustomed to the strictness of the later Sanskrit metres, seems here to have endeavoured to imitate the Vaidik rhythm, in which greater liberty was allowed. Thus he produced a verse too irregular to come under any of the later metres, but rather too regular for a Vaidik hymn.

It is certain that the verse itself does not occur in the Rig-veda, but the metre [see p. 160] resembles that which commonly prevails there. Doubtless Kālidāsa intended it as an imitation of the sacred style of poetry. That it is addressed to Agni constitutes another point of resemblance. Vaitāṇḍas: see p. 148, note 3; p. 97, note 2. Kṛipta-dhish-nyāh = rachitadhishtānāh. Prānta-santirna-darbhāh, i.e., pārśveshu chatas-riṣhu dikṣhu sanktirṇa darbhā yeshām. See Wilson's translation of the Rig-veda, p. 3, note 1; and compare Rig-veda, vii., 13, 'Thou, four-eyed Agni, blazest as the protector of the worshippers,' etc. Pālayantu = rakṣantu is the reading of all the Bengālī MSS., supported by Kāṭavema, Śankara, and Chandra-śekhara, but the Devanāgarī MSS. all have pārayantu.

bhrita [= pika] lit., 'nourished by a stranger.' The Indian Cuckoo is supposed to leave her eggs in the nest of the crow to be hatched. This bird must have resembled the nightingale rather than the bird known as the cuckoo in Europe. One of its names was Vasanta-dūta, 'messenger of spring.' Its song had none of the monotony which characterises the note of the cuckoo, but was as sweet [madhura: Ritu-s.] and varied as that of the nightingale with us. 'The beauty of cuckoos is their song:' Hitop., l. 839. 'On a journey [yātrāyām] the note of a cuckoo is indicative of good-fortune [śubha-suchakāḥ]. The answer of the trees was effected by the song of the cuckoo [pika-ravenāira sampannam]. Next the answer of the sylvan deities is given (by a voice in the air):' Ś.

<sup>1</sup> 'May her path be pleasantly-diversified [pleasant at intervals] by lakes (that are) verdant with-lotus-beds, (may it have) the heat of the sun's rays moderated by shady trees, (may) its dust be soft with the [as the] pollen from the lotuses and (may it be cheered by) gentle favourable breezes and (be altogether) prosperous.' Ramyañtarah = manohara-madhyah: Ś. : = manojna-madhyah: Ch., 'having its middle space delightful,' 'pleasant throughout the intervening distance,' an epithet of panthāḥ. Chhāyā-drumaiḥ = chhāyā-pradhānair-vrikṣhaiḥ, 'trees chiefly abounding in shade:' K.: = chhāyā-lakṣita-drumaiḥ, 'trees characterised by shade:' Ch. It is a compound similar to śāka-pārthiva and abhijñāna-śakuntalā: see p. 3, note 2. Chhāyā-taruḥ, 'a large tree, one that gives shade,' is found in Wilson. Compare Hitop., line 1717. 'That is called a chhāyā-taru, 'shade-tree,' whose under-part [talam] excessively cool shade [atyanta-śītala-chhāyā] does not quit either in the forenoon or afternoon:' Ś. and Ch. Niyamita = apanita. Kūśeśaya = śatapatra, 'a lotus.' Śānta = śānta-vega, manda: K. = pātacharādī-kunyu, 'free from robbers, etc.:' Ś. and Ch. The compound may therefore be translated 'free from molestation and having favourable breezes.' Śivaśca bhūyāt panthāh: This seems to have been a phrase commonly used as a parting benediction, like the English 'A pleasant journey to you!' Compare Panthānas te santu śirāh: Hitop., l. 1442, Sāhit-darp., p. 344, Mudrā-r., p. 30, l. 17, and further on in this act.

<sup>1</sup> 'Dear to thee as (thy own) kinsfolk.' Compare raṇa-rāsa-bandhubhā in verse 90. My own Bombay MS. has ṇādi (supported by the Calcutta edition), the others all nādi for ṇādi. There is no doubt about the doubling of the n when not initial, as Vararuchi, iii., 44, gives vinndāna for vijndāna. As to bhaavadīnam: see p. 129, note 2.

<sup>1</sup> 'The deer let fall the mouthfuls of darbha-grass, the peacocks cease (their) dancing, the creepers as they cast [in casting] their pale leaves, appear to shed tears [as it were shed tears].' Udgalita: so read all the Devanāgarī and K.; the root gal, 'to drop,' is not given in the dictionaries in conjunction with the preposition ut, but as one sense of this root is 'to swallow' [whence gala, 'the throat'], udgalita may possibly be equivalent to vilgita, 'ejected from the throat or mouth,' which is the reading of the Bengālī MSS. Mṛigdh: all the Devanāgarī read mīto for mṛigya, and in the next line assini for āsrūni, apparently in violation of the metre. Dr. Bochtlingk has suggested miā and ansū, the latter is a legitimate acc. pl. from anru, the masculine Prakṛit equivalent of the neuter āsrū: see Vararuchi, iv., 15. Parityakta-nartana: The dancing of the Indian peacock, especially at the approach of rain, in which it is said to take especial delight, is frequently alluded to in Hindu poetry. Compare Megh., verses 46 and 78; Ritu-sanhāra, ii., 6. Bhartri-h., i., 43. Osaria for apasrita: compare p. 5, l. 9, and Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 363. Raghuvansa, xiv., 69, contains a sentiment precisely parallel to the above, Nṛityam mayūrah kusumāni vrikshā darbhaṁ upātān vijahur harinyah, etc.

The feminine noun bāhū is more appropriately joined with śākhā, but bāhū is admissible: compare p. 25, l. 2. The Bengālī have śākhāmayair bāhūbhīh, 'with arms consisting of branches.'

superfluous. It is not necessary, however, to connect it with nayanayor, as the passage might be rendered 'make the tears that impede our business cease to cling in (thy) upturned-eyelashed-eyes.' Vāshpa is the hot moisture that precedes the formation of tears: see p. 157, note 3. It does not seem to be used in the plural. Cf. munchato vāshpam ushnam: Megh., verse 12. Viratānubandha: my own MS. has vihatānubandha: Anubandha, lit., 'binding after,' 'following after,' hence 'cleaving,' 'adhering.' The Bengālī MSS. have śiṭhīlānubandham = santārambham [sic?]: Ś. Vishambhavantī = skhalitāni syuh, 'are liable to trip or stumble.' Ś. and Ch. Compare page 139, line 4.

<sup>1</sup> 'Friend, see! the poor female-Chakravāka not perceiving her dear mate hid by the lotus-leaves, calls to (him) thus: "Hard (is the lot) I suffer:"' See page 129, note 1, and compare in Vikram., Act IV., Sarasi nalini-patrenāpi twam dvṛita-vigrahām nanu sahacharim dūre matwā viraushi samutsukah, 'Thou indeed [i.e., the male chakravāka] art sorrowfully crying to thy mate thinking her to be far away, although her body is only concealed from thee by a lotus-leaf.' A few lines before this passage, the cry is compared to the sound ka ka. Whether this may have anything to do with the somewhat harsh phrase dukkaram karemi, here employed as the cry of the bird, need not be discussed. All the Devanāgarī concur in this reading. Kātavema, however, has dushkaram khalu aham tarkayāmi. The root kṛi sometimes has the sense of tark, 'think,' 'imagine' [Cf. page 41, note 1]. Indeed, there are few senses which this root 'of all work' may not have, when conjoined with nouns; and dushkaram kṛi is not more harsh than śokam kṛi, 'to make or suffer sorrow.' Śāṅkara has dushkaram ayam chakravākah karoti. Instead of pia three of the MSS. have bi for api. <sup>1</sup> 'How now, removed from my foster-father's side, like a tendril of the sandal-tree uprooted from the slopes of Malaya, shall I support life in a strange place?' Chandana [σανταλον], the Sirium myrtifolium, 'a large kind of myrtle with pointed leaves,' the wood of which affords many highly esteemed perfumes, unguents, etc., and is celebrated for its delicious scent. It is found chiefly on the slopes [tata, upatyakā : Ragh., iv., 46, 48] of the Malaya mountains, which are thence called chandanaśhala, the tree being sometimes called Malaya-ja, 'Malaya-born.' Frequent allusion is made to this tree being infested by snakes : see Ragh., iv., 48 ; Hitop., line 1582. Tara, of which the Sanskrit equivalent is probably tata, is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. It is synonymous with utsanga, 'the slope of a hill,' so that Malayasya utsangāt exactly answers to tdtasya-ankāt [anka = utsanga : Amara-kosha, iv., 1, 4.] D and r are certainly interchangeable in Sanskrit and Prākṛit, and the substitution of d for t is usual. L, however, is the more common substitute, and, I confess that my first idea was that Malaya-tara was for Mayala-tala = Malayasya upatyakā : Ragh., iv., 46.

<sup>1</sup> 'The sun has ascended to another division (of the sky).’ The Mackenzie MS. has yugāntam adhirūdhaḥ; the Calcutta edition dūram adhirūdhaḥ; Chézy gaganāntaram adhirūdhaḥ. According to Chandra-śekhara, yuga is by some considered equivalent to prahara, ‘a division of the day, comprising one-eighth of the sun’s diurnal revolution, or three hours;’ by others, to hasta-chatushtayam, ‘a space of four cubits.’ Dr. Boehtlingk considers yugāntara to be the second half of the arc described by the sun in the heavens, and translates, ‘The Sun has already entered the afternoon-quarter of the heavens.’

Kāṭavema explains it by chaturdrah antāḥ yasyāḥ śd. Compare p. 124, l. 7. Daushyanti is a regular, though not very common form of patronymic, derived from Dushyanta, as Dākshi, ‘a descendant of Daksha,’ from Daksha; Aindri from Indra, etc. See Laghu-kaum., No. 1072. Apra-

Also Manu, vi, 2, 3, 'When the Father of a family perceives his own wrinkles and grey hair, committing the care of his wife to his sons, or accompanied by her, let him repair to the woods,' i.e., Let him enter upon the third quarter of his life, that of a hermit: see p. 157, note 3 at end. Sánto: compare p. 20, l. 4. Padam: compare page 145, note 3 at end.

which the householder who maintained a perpetual fire [see p. 148, note 3] and devoted himself to the priesthood had daily to perform [Manu, iii., 67, iv., 21]: viz.—1. Brahma-yajna, in honour of the Rishis, the authors of the Vedas, and therefore performed by the study of the Vedas and holy writ in general [Manu, iv., 147]. 2. Deva-yajna, in honour of the superior gods, performed by oblations to Fire himself, or through Fire to the other gods [see p. 148, note 3, and Manu, iii., 84, 85]. 3. Pitri-yajna, in honour of the progenitors of mankind [Manu, iii., 194], and especially deceased ancestors, performed by pouring out water with tila, etc. [Manu, iii., 202]. The solemn celebration of this offering at stated periods was called Śrāddha: see p. 112, note 1. 4. Manushya-yajna or Nri-yajna, in honour of men, performed by offering water, food, a scat, etc., to a guest: see p. 35, note 2; and Manu, iii., 99, etc. 5. Bhūta-yajna, or Bali, in honour of all creatures of every description, but particularly of those not provided for by the other four sacrifices. It might have reference, however, to the deities and beings honoured in the other sacraments. That it had especial reference to the Griha-devatāḥ is indicated in Manu, iii., 117, with commentary, and in the Mrichchhakatī, where Chārudatta, after fulfilling the Deva-kārya, or second of the above rites [compare p. 140, l. 16] is described as offering the bali to the household gods around the threshold. His speech as he offers it, corresponds remarkably with that of Kāśyapa, Yādam baliḥ sapaḍi mad-griha-dehahindm, hansaścha śrāsa-ganaścha vilupta-pūrvah, tānceva samprati virūḍha-trinānkurāsu, vijānaliḥ patati kṛta-mukhāvalāhah.

<sup>3</sup> 'When a being (in other respects) happy becomes conscious-of-an ardent-longing on seeing charming objects and hearing sweet sounds, then in all probability, without being aware of it, he remembers with his mind the friendships of former births, firmly-rooted in his heart.' Ramyāni, i.e., vastāni: S. Kātavema has rūpāni for ramyāni and sthītāni for sthirāni.

Abodha-pūram, 'without any previous intimation or suggestion,' 'unconsciously.' Compare the similar expressions, amati-pūram, abuddhi-pūram, 'without any previous idea.' The doctrine of transmigration is an essential dogma of the Hindú religion. Dim recollections of occurrences in a former life are supposed occasionally to cross the mind, and the present condition of every person is supposed to derive its character of happiness or misery, elevation or degradation from the virtues or vices of a previous state of being. The consequences of actions in a former birth are called vipāka.

<sup>1</sup> The Kanchukī or chamberlain was the attendant on the women's apartments. Śankara and Chandra-śekhara quote the following from Bharata: Antahpura-charo vridhho vipro guna-gandhvitah sarva-kāryārtha-kūśalah kanchukī abhidyate. Jara-vaiklavya-yuktena viśed gātreṇa kanchukī; 'The character styled kanchukī is an attendant in the inner apartments, an old-man, a brāhman, endowed with numerous good qualities, and a clever man of business. The kanchukī should enter with a body decrepit and tottering from age.' Compare this scene, and the speeches of the Chamberlain, with the opening scene of the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī.

<sup>2</sup> 'The wand [staff of office] which was assumed by me, having to watch over the royal female apartments, thinking "It is a matter of form," much time having elapsed since then, that same (wand) has become (indispensable, or a useful crutch) for the support of me whose step falters in walking.' Vetra-yashī, properly 'a cane-stick,' used as a badge of office, like the gold stick or black rod in European courts. Avahitena, lit., 'attentive,' 'careful,' 'watchful,' i.e., 'appointed to a careful superintendence or watch.' So read all the Devanāgarī; the Bengālī, with Śankara, have adhikritena, i.e., 'by me set over,' etc. Avarodha-griheshu: see p. 21, note 1. Bahutithe = bahu- opposition to autsukya-mātram, making rājyam the nominative case to arasā- dayati. The Bengāl MS. [E. I. II. 1060] gives pratishtām in the margin, and this reading is certainly supported by the parallel passage (sādayanti pratishtām, etc.) in the beginning of Act 3 of the Vikramorvāśī. Chandra śekhara also notices this reading, but adopts the one in the text and censures the interpretation of Śāṅkara. Pratishtā may, without doubt, have the sense I have given, which agrees with the prārthitārthādāhigama and chari- tārthatā of the preceding lines. Ati-śrama may either refer to the trouble which the king has undergone in arriving at the object of his ambition, or to the troubles of his subjects which it is his office to remove. In the latter case na cha śramāya will mean 'without leading to personal trouble or weariness.' The Indian chattar, or parasol, from the shelter it affords has been chosen as one of the insignia of royalty. It is very heavy, and being fixed on a long pole greatly fatigues the person holding it. It is always borne by a servant; but here the king is figuratively made to bear it himself, so that he cannot give shelter to himself and others, without undergoing great personal fatigue. Na cha śramāya: is found in all the Devanāgarī MSS.; the Bengālī have yathā śramāya, i.e., 'Royalty does not so much lead to the removal of fatigue as to fatigue.' According to Kāṭavema, who repeats the first negative before na cha śramāya, the two negatives are here employed affirmatively, i.e., to affirm that royalty does lead to personal fatigue. 'It is not for the removal of great fatigue and not not for fatigue.' (Compare the note on this use of the negatives, p. 24, note 1.

<sup>1</sup> Vaitālika = vandin, 'a herald.' Ch. = stuti-pāthaka, 'a panegyrist.' Ś. He was a kind of herald or crier, whose duty was to announce in measured verse, the fixed periods into which the king's day was divided. The strain which he poured forth usually contained allusions to incidental circumstances. In the Vikramorvaśī and Ratnāvalī, only one Vaitālika appears, but here and in the Mālavikāgnimitra there are two. In the Vikramorvaśī [Act 2] he announces the sixth hour or watch of the day, about two or three o'clock, at which period alone the king is allowed to amuse himself. Professor Wilson observes that the royal station was no sinecure. From the Daśa-kumāra it appears that the day and night were each divided into eight portions of one hour and a half, reckoned from sunrise, and thus distributed:—Day—1. The king being dressed, is to audit accounts; 2. He is to pronounce judgment in appeals; 3. He is to breakfast; 4. He is to receive and make presents; 5. He is to discuss political questions with his ministers; 6. He is to amuse himself; 7. He is to review his troops; 8. He is to hold a military council. —Night—1. He is to receive the reports of his spies and envoys; 2. He is to sup or dine; 3. He is to retire to rest, after the perusal of some sacred work; 4 and 5. He is to sleep; 6. He is to rise and purify himself; 7. He

For the tree suffers intense heat with its head (while) it allays by (its) shade the heat of those seeking (its) shelter.' Ātharvā: see p. 30, note 1. Prīttir: some of the Bengālī, supported by K. and Ś., have srishtir.

<sup>2</sup> 'Having assumed the mace [sceptre] thou restrainest those who advance on the wrong road [set out on bad courses]; thou composest differences; thou art adequate to the protection (of thy people). Let kinsmen make their appearance forsooth in affluent circumstances [when there is abundant property] but in thee the whole duty of a kinsman is comprehended towards thy subjects.' Ātta-danda = grihita-danda. Danda, 'a magistrate's staff,' taken as a symbol of punishment, and justice. It is sometimes 'the sceptre of a king.' Hence danda-dhara, dandin, 'Staff-bearer,' etc., are names for Yama, the god of justice and lord of punishment. Vimarga: some have kumārṅga, 'bad ways.' Kālpas = sampadyase: K. Manu furnishes several examples of klrip in the sense of 'to be sufficient,' 'to be fit': ii., 151; ii., 266; vi., 20. displayed?' Swit is a particle of question and doubt. Avagunthana = mastakāchadana-vastra : Ch. The second half of this verse is clear.

<sup>1</sup> 'The suspicion [conjecture] engendered by my curiosity does not seem appropriate.' The Mackenzie MS., supported by K., has padihādi for pratihāti [in place of pasaradi for prasarati, the reading of the other Devanāgarī] and padihado for pahido. I have retained pahido, as it appears to make the best sense; but the Prākṛit seems here hardly to admit of literal Sanskrit interpretation.

<sup>3</sup> 'Having reflected on [called to mind], the affection of thy lord, be firm.' Bhāva = sneha : compare p. 112, note 3. The Bengālī have smṛitā for avadhārya. Ārya-putra, 'son of a venerable parent,' is the regular dramatic mode of addressing a husband.

How should darkness appear, the Sun emitting light [when the Sun shines]?' Tapati, loc. case of the present part., here used absolutely. Gharmāśau = sūryo: Ś. The Dictionary gives gharma-rāsmi.

<sup>3</sup> 'My title of Rājā has indeed significancy.' The Rishis had, in the preceding verse, compared the king to the Sun, and rājan is derived from rāj, 'to shine.' It is, however, probable that the play is on the words rājan and rakshitri. Compare Manu, vii., 3. Rakshārtham asya sarvasya rājānam asrijat prabhuh, 'The Supreme Being created a king for the protection of this universe.' Dr. Boehtlingk remarks that in these cases it little signifies whether the derivation be true or false. In Mahābh., xii., 1032, rājan is derived from the root ranj, 'to conciliate.'

<sup>4</sup> 'Is his reverence Kāśyapa prosperous for the welfare of the world?' Kūśali: see p. 35, note 1. Bhagavān, etc.: When the letter l is preceded by t, d, or n dental, it requires the assimilation of the letters to itself, and in the case of dental n, the mark called Chandra-vindu is written over, to show that the l substituted for it has a nasal sound: Laghu-kaum., No. 79.

<sup>5</sup> 'Saints [ṛṣi., men endowed with or capable of perfection: Vish. Pur., p. 45] have prosperity in their power. He with inquiries about your safety says this to your highness.' It will be readily remarked that the character of these Rishis is evidently that of plain, honest, independent men. Arāmaya: see Manu, ii., 127, 'Let a man ask a Brāhman, on meeting him, as to his kūśalam; a Kshatriya, as to his arāmaya; a Vaiśya, as to his kshemam; and a Śūdra, as to his ārogyam.' The king was of course a Kshatriya: see page 30, note 2.

<sup>2</sup> 'Thou art esteemed by us the chief of the worthy, and Śakuntalā, incarnate virtue. Brahmā [the Lord of creatures] bringing together a bride and bridegroom of equal merit, has after a long time (now first) incurred no censure.' Nah, the Colebrooke MS. reads yat. Vadhū-varam, a Dvandwa compound in the neuter gender. Vāchyam na gataḥ: whether Brahmā was famous for presiding over ill-assorted marriages, or whether there may be some allusion here to the bad character he obtained among the gods by his incestuous attempt on the virtue of his own daughter, is not clear.

<sup>3</sup> 'Therefore now let her, being quick with child, be received, for the joint discharge of religious-rites,' i.e., those rites or sanskāras, which were performed for the child before and after birth, probably by the parents conjointly [saha]: see Manu, ii., 27, etc.

The Devanāgarī MSS. have imā for iminā. The latter, which is the reading of the oldest Bengālī, I have retained on account of the metre. There is no reason why in Prākṛit iminā should not be used for the fem. instrum., since imassim is admissible for the fem. loc.: see p. 36, l. 2. Ekaikam = anyonyam, 'mutually': Ś., Ch. Bhannadu is the reading of some of the Bengālī MSS. followed by the Calcutta edition; I have written bhannadu for bhanādu, on account of the metre, and on the authority of Lassen's Inst. Prak., p. 277. The Devanāgarī have kim bhanāmi; which reading violates the metre and makes the construction of the sentence very obscure. They also read ekkam ekkaṣa. Eka may be for eka-janah, applicable to either gender. The commentary of Chandra-śekhara is in favour of the above interpretation.

This is the reading of the oldest Bengālī, and I have adopted it as preferable to that of the Devanāgarī, Kim kṛita-kārya-āpesho dharmam prati vimukhatā kṛitavajñā. Dr. Boehtlingk has endeavoured to solve the difficulty by suggesting that kṛitavajñā should be struck out of the text, as being probably an interpolation from the margin. chhanti = vādhanti : Ś. = vyāpnuvanti : K. Cf. Ragh., xii., 57; vi., 9; x., 80. The root murchh has generally the opposite sense, to 'lose strength,' 'grow weaker,' 'faint away.' It is applied to the thickening of darkness, in the Vikramorvaśī, Act 3, tamasam nīśi murchhatām.

of carnal connexion. Mushtam: the Taylor MS. has ishtam, and the Bengali dushtam. It must be borne in mind that Śakuntalā was married to Dushyanta according to the Gāndharva form [p. 127, note 4] during the absence of her foster-father: see pp. 134, 135 with notes. Pratigrāhayatā: the causal may sometimes give the sense of 'allowing,' or 'permitting,' as in nāsayati, 'he suffers to perish.' Pātrikṛito, a very noticeable phrase, is a Chwī compound, formed from pātram, a neuter noun meaning 'a receptacle,' applied to express any deserving or worthy person: see Manu, iv., 227.

<sup>1</sup> Kāṭavema, Śankara, and the old Bengali MS. interpret soanīo by śochanīya, 'to be sorrowed for;' but Chandra-śekhara has śodhanīya, and is followed by Chézy and the Calcutta edition. The meaning will then be 'I myself am now to be cleared [justified] by myself.' All the MSS., except one, insert me.

<sup>2</sup> 'Now that my marriage is called-in-question, this is not the (proper) form-of-address:' see p. 196, note 3. <sup>1</sup> 'Peace! a sin!' i.e., 'Silence! let me not listen to such sinful words;' or, if no stop is placed after śāntam, 'May the sin be palliated!' This seems to be the usual formula in the plays for averting the ill effects of blasphemous, malevolent, or lying words. Sometimes the stage-direction karnau pīdhāya is omitted: compare Acts vii., 57; Mṛich., p. 36, l. 5; p. 230, l. 6; p. 306, l. 9; p. 329, l. 1. Mālavik., p. 69, l. 10. Mudr., p. 24, l. 5.

<sup>1</sup> 'In all probability the ring slipped from (the finger of) thee as thou wert offering homage to the water at Śachī's holy-pool, within Śakrávatára.' Śakra is a name of Indra, and Śakrávatára some sacred place of pilgrimage where he descended upon earth. Śachī is his wife, to whom there was probably a tirtha, or holy bathing-place [see p. 16, note 2], consecrated at this place, where Śakuntalā had performed her ablutions.

<sup>2</sup> 'This is that which is said [thus is proved the truth of the proverb] "Woman-kind is ready-witted." ' Strainam = stri-jātiḥ, 'the female sex:' K. The Bengálí have idam tat pratyutpanna-matitvam strīṇām: compare Hitop., l. 2320, where pratyutpanna-matīḥ is the name given to the ready-witted fish. See also Hitop., line 2338, 'The food of women is said to be two-fold, their wit four-fold, their cunning six-fold, and their passion eight-fold.'

<sup>3</sup> 'Here, however, sovereignty has been shown by destiny.' A similar sentiment occurs further on in this play, and at the beginning of the 4th. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, bhavitavyatā atra balavati, 'Here destiny has shown its power.'

<sup>4</sup> Dr. Boehtlingk considers that śrotavyam is here taken as a substantive, and construes, 'The moment-for-hearing (what else you have to say) has now arrived:' compare page 111, line 7. As the passive participle is often used substantively the translation may be 'What took place is now to be heard.'

<sup>3</sup> 'The untaught cunning is observed of females (even) in-those-that-are-not-of-the-human-race [i.e., even in animals]; how much more (of those) who are endowed with reason [i.e., of women]. The most obvious sense of this word, if the context would allow it, would be, 'those women who have received instruction.' Para-bhṛitāh: see p. 162, note 3.

<sup>2</sup> 'For (when) I, whose state of feeling was dreadfully-severe from the absence of (all) recollection, (persisted in) not admitting that affection had privately existed (between us); it (seemed) as if (the god) Smara's bow was snapped asunder by that very-red-eyed one with excessive anger, on the parting of her curved eyebrows.' The double-entendre in the word Smara, which means 'recollection' as well as 'the god of Love,' is noticeable. See the notes on Kāmadeva, p. 99, note 2, and p. 101, note 1. The figure by which the eyebrows of a beautiful woman are compared to Cupid's bow is common, and the glances from the eye are by a similar metaphor often likened to arrows discharged from it. Śakuntalā is said to break the bow by the parting of her eyebrows, which were contracted in anger. Possibly one effect of anger might be to wrinkle the brow, which would appear to separate the eyebrows.

<sup>2</sup> Guru-lāghava is properly a kind of abstract noun formed from the Dvandwa guru-laghu, the viddhi taking place in the second member of the compound instead of the first. The sense will then be, 'I ask your reverence as to the greater and the less [i.e. the heavier and the lighter] sin.' This is addressed to the Brāhmaṇ who acts as the Purohita or family priest, whose duty it would be to advise the king as to which was the greater or less sinful course. This sense of guru-lāghava is supported by two other passages: Mahābh., xii., 1273; and Episode of Yajn., 6. The more obvious sense of the compound would be, 'the alleviation [solution] of a grave matter.'

When the lines of the right hand formed themselves into a circle, this was the mark of a future hero and emperor. Chakra-vartin is generally explained to mean, 'an emperor whose dominion extends to the horizon [chakra] or from sea to sea.'

<sup>2</sup> 'Then enters the king's brother-in-law (as) superintendent of the city-police, and two policemen [guards] bringing a man (with his hands) bound behind.' Nāgarika = nagarādhikārī, 'superintendent of the city.' Ś. = nagare niyuktah 'one set over the city:' K., and equivalent here to 'the chief of the police.' Śyāla = rāshtriya or rāshtriya [Am.-kosha, i., vii., 14]. The king's brother-in-law, who here acts as the superintendent of police, is a character not unfrequently introduced in the plays: compare Mrich., p. 224, l. 4; p. 227, l. 12; p. 230, l. 1, in which passages he is called rāja-śyālah and rāshtriya-śyālah. Kātavema observes that the policemen and the fishermen in this scene speak the Māgadhi form of Prākṛit: see Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 391, but Śāṅkara affirms that the fisherman speaks the Śākara or Śākārika dialect [Chaura-pātras tu śākara-nāmadheya śākara-prāya-bhāṣaṇāt] see Lass. Inst., Prāk., p. 422. Both Śāṅkara and Kātavema have omitted to make mention of the dialect spoken by the Śyāla or Nāgarika. According to Viśwanātha [Sāhit. Darp., page 180, line 12] he ought to speak the Dākshinātyā form of Prākṛit. In the Bengālī MSS., and some of the Devanāgarī, he is certainly made to speak a dialect, distinct from the other characters of this scene, but in the best MSS. pure Prākṛit forms are found in the speeches attributed to him. Indeed, as brother-in-law of the king, he must have been a Kshatriya, or one of the military caste.

<sup>2</sup> 'O thief!' Kumbhila or kumbhilaka, seems to be identical with kumbhila, kumbhilaka, kumbhira, kumbhira, etc., although the meaning 'thief' is not given to the two latter words in the dictionary. Compare in the beginning of Act 5. of the Vikramorvaśī, maṇi-kumbhira, 'gem-stealer,' (applied to the bird who swallowed the crest-jewel); at the end of Act 2, loptreṇa śuchitasya kumbhira; and in Mālavik., aho kumbhila pari-haraṇtyā chandrikā.

The name might have been engraven on the stone itself, or on the gold in which it was set. Utkṛt is used in the sense of 'excavating,' in Mahābh., i., 5813; and samutkirṇa with the meaning 'perforated,' in Ragh., i., 4.

<sup>5</sup> This is spoken ironically, as according to Manu (x, 46-48), the nishāda, or fisherman caste, was one of the lowest. 'Those who are considered as low-born shall subsist only by such employments as the twice-born despise

Nishddas (must subsist) by catching fish, &c.' Any occupation which involved the sin of slaughtering animals (excepting in the case of sacrificing to the god Śiva) was considered despicable. Butchers and leather-sellers were as great, or even greater, objects of scorn.

<sup>1</sup> 'That occupation in which one was born, as-the-saying-is (kila), though in-bad-repute, verily must not be abandoned. The same sacrificing-Brāhman, who is savago in the act of slaughtering animals, may be (of a disposition) tender with compassion.' Sahajam = kula-kramānugatam, 'inherited from one's forefathers.' Manu is very peremptory in restricting special occupations to the different castes, especially to the mixed and lowest castes, formed by intermarriage with the others. 'A man of the lowest class, who, through covetousness, lives by the acts of the highest, let the king strip of all his wealth and banish. His own office, though badly performed, is preferable to that of another, though well-performed; for he who lives by the duties of another class, immediately falls from his own:' x., 96, 97. Hence we find the employments of fishing, slaughtering animals for food, leather-selling, basket-making, burning the dead, &c. &c., assigned to men born in certain impure castes, and confined perpetually to their descendants. To the higher and purer castes a greater variety of employment was allowed. Śankara observes that the Brāhman is called Shat-karmā, from the precept of Manu (i., 88), which enjoins upon him six occupations, viz., reading, teaching, sacrificing, assisting others to sacrifice, giving, and receiving. Under certain circumstances he was allowed by Manu to engage even in trade, and other employments. The sacrifice of animals was enjoined only on the priests of the god Śiva. The Brāhman, in the worship of this god, might have to kill animals; but this was as much a necessary part of his business, as killing fish, of the fisherman, and was no proof of any natural cruelty of disposition. Śankara defines a Śrotriya Brāhman thus: Janmanā Brāhmano jneyah sanakrair dwija uchyate vidyayā yāti vipratwam tribhiḥ śrotriya uchyate, i.e., 'Birth constitutes the title Brāhman, sacramental rites (especially that of investiture with the sacred thread) the title Dwija, or twice-born; knowledge, the title Vipra; and all three Śrotriya.' The usual definition of this word is, a Brāhman conversant with śruti, or scripture.

<sup>1</sup> The Rohita or Rohi fish [Cyprinus Rohita] lit., Red-fish, is a kind of carp, found in lakes and ponds in the neighbourhood of the Ganges. It grows to the length of three feet, is very voracious, and its flesh, though coarse, is eaten. Its back is olive-coloured, its belly of a beautiful golden hue, its fins and eyes red.

<sup>2</sup> 'O Jānuka, the villain stinking (as he does) of raw flesh (is) doubtless a fisherman.' Jānuka is the name of the other policeman, who is supposed to have detected the thief; jānuka iti chora-jñātur apara-paddāter nāma: Ś. Some of the Bengālī MSS. have jālua for jānuka. Visra-gandhi = amisha-gandhi: Ch. Go-ghātī: the killing of a cow [go-hatyā] is reckoned by the Hindús a most heinous crime: compare Hitop., l. 162. Hence go-ghātī, 'cow-killer,' is applied as a reproachful epithet to any rogue or low person. Thus in the Mricchhakatika, p. 299, l. 4; p. 317, l. 2, the Chāndāla is called go-ha or go-ghna.

<sup>1</sup> 'My hands tingle [my fingers itch] to bind a flower (about the head) of this victim [criminal about to be executed].' All the Devanāgarī MSS. have sumanah pinaddhum, excepting the Mackenzie, which has sumahanam for sumano. The Bengālī have got rid of the difficulty by substituting vyāpādayitum, 'to kill.' It is clear from what follows that the two policemen expected that their master would return with the king's order for putting the fisherman to death. From the Mālati-Mādhava, and other plays, it is evident that a person about to be offered as a victim to Śiva or Durgā had a wreath of flowers bound round the head. It may reasonably be assumed that this was also the case with common criminals, previous to their execution.

<sup>2</sup> 'Thou wilt be food for [an offering to] the crows [vultures], or wilt see the face of a dog.' Grīdhrah-baliḥ: see p. 179, note 1. Śūno mukham: so read all the Devanāgarī MSS., excepting the Mackenzie, which omits the clause entirely. Dr. Bochtlingk has adopted as an emendation, śūno mukham, i.e., śiśor [not śiśuno] mukham, and translated 'or thou wilt see the face of (thy) child (once more).' He has supported this interpretation by a reference to two other passages, one in the 7th. Act of this play [putra-mukha-darśanena], another in Mric., 303, 4. Doubtless putra-mukham darśa is a common phrase, but the whole point of this passage seems to me to lie in the ludicrous substitution of śunah for putrasya.

The name Yama, i.e., Restrainer or Punisher [from yam, 'to restrain'] is given to him as judge of departed spirits and god of punishment.

The act of impaling was called sūlāropana, and one who deserved it sūlya. 'Mounting on an elephant,' denotes elevation to high dignity, elephants being used in triumphal processions.

<sup>3</sup> So read most of the Devanāgarī MSS. Matoyikā is not given in the Dictionary. Dr. Boehtlingk translates it by fisch-brut, 'the fry of fish,' and observes that it is also the name for a kind of fish called in German schaar. Had the word been matsyika or mātsyika, 'a fisherman,' there would have been no difficulty. May it not mean 'a fish-woman,' and the phrase be translated, 'this lord of a fish-woman,' 'this husband of a fish-woman?' Kātavema and the Bengālī have matsya-śatror, 'enemy of fishes.'

<sup>1</sup> 'Let the half of this be the price of your flower (for binding about my head).' The fisherman is again ironical. The allusion of course is to the flower mentioned at p. 222, note 1. There is probably a double-entendre in umanah, which may signify 'good-will,' as well as 'flower.'

<sup>2</sup> 'Our first friendship requires to be attested over (some) wine,' i.e., We must pledge ourselves over our cups or in drinking each other's health. Kādambarī, 'an intoxicating liquor distilled from the Kadamba flower.' Sākshikam: compare Mālavikāg., page 53, line 7; Raghu-vansā, xi., 48, and Hitopadeśa, line 842.

Here it denotes 'close attendance or waiting,' as in Hitop., line 1112, anytwind sānmidhyam avāṣyam karantiyam. In the interlude before the 4th. <sup>1</sup> Ritútsava, lit., 'the festival of the season,' i.e., the Vasantotsava, or 'great vernal festival,' in celebration of the return of spring, and said to be in honour of the god Krishna. Originally his son Kámadeva, the god of Love, must have been the object of worship in this festival. It is identified with the Holi or Dolá-yátra, the Saturnalia, or rather, Carnival of the Hindús, when people of all conditions take liberties with each other, especially by scattering red powder and coloured water on the clothes of persons passing in the street, as described in Ratnávali, pp. 5, 6, 7, where syringes and waterpipes are used by the crowd. Flowers, and especially the opening blossoms of the Mango, would naturally be much used for decoration at this festival, and as offerings to the god of Love. It was formerly held on the full moon of the month Chaitra, or about the beginning of April, but now on the full moon of Phálguna, or about the beginning of March. The other great Hindú festival, held in the autumn, about October, is called Durgotsava or Durgá-púja, being in honour of the goddess Durgá.

<sup>2</sup> Pranidhāna, 'profound meditation,' or that mental faculty by which divine beings were supposed to be able to ascertain future events. The verb pranidhā is primarily 'to fix in;' hence 'to fix the mind on,' 'be intent on.' Compare in Vikram. [interlude before the 4th. Act] mayā pranidhāna-sthitayā atyāhitam upalabdham.

[touch, bear off] the idol of (her) husband?' Kah anya: compare p. 208,
l. 4. Pati-devatā, 'the goddess of her husband,' or as we should say, 'a wife idolized by her husband.' This I take to be the sense of this expression, which is found in all the Devanāgarī MSS. The Bengālī have pati-vratām,
'a wife devoted to her husband.' Pari-mārṣtūm [so read all the Devanāgarī] must come from pari-mrij, to which Westergaard gives but one meaning, 'abstergere.' Doubtless, it may be used like pari-mris, 'to lay hands on,'
'lay hold of:' cf. p. 202, note 4. One MS. [E.I.H. 1060] has parā-marṣtūm.

Schol., Chézy. Janma-pratishṭhā = janani: Ś. Dushyanta speaks of Śakuntalā to the Vidúshaka as, 'thy friend.' So the Yaksha speaks of his wife to the Cloud, in Megha-dūta, verses 87, 93.

<sup>1</sup> 'Truly the state-of-mental-delusion [delirium, hallucination] is to be wondered at, not the recovery-from-it [the awakening from it].' According to Śāṅkara, sammoha is equivalent to 'forgetfulness,' and pratibodha to 'recollection.'

<sup>2</sup> This is either the causal form of the root pri, or a nominal verb from pāra, 'the other side;' meaning first 'to traverse,' 'get through,' 'bring to an end;' and secondly in Prākṛit and more modern Sanskrit, 'to be able.' In the latter sense, which is the one required here, it is much used in the Bengālī dialect. Compare in Greek, πέρα, πέρας, περάω, πεपालω.

<sup>3</sup> 'Was it a dream? or an illusion-of-magic? or a mental-delusion? or (the result of my) good-works so far indeed rewarded (and then) marred? It has certainly passed away, never to return: (and so has become) the steep precipice of my heart's-fondest-hopes.' Such is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS., and doubtless the true one. I have adopted eva and prapātāh [in place of eto and prapātāh] from the Mackenzie, the former supported by Kātavema. Māyā, i.e., indra-jāldi-kriyā: Ś. Bhrama: one so affected imagines that to be present which does not really exist [asad api sākshāt-karoti: Ś., Ch.] Puṇyam, i.e., śivakiyam sukṛitam: K. Tāvat phalam eva, i.e., darsana-phalam eva: K. darsana-mātra-phalam: Ch., 'fruitful so far only as the sight of Śakuntalā': K. Ālishtam [cf. p. 201, l. 7]: the best explanation of this idea will be found in p. 80, l. 6, with note 2, and in note 2 in this page. Asannivṛittiyai: compare Raghu-v., viii., 48, para-lokam asannivṛittaye gatāsi, 'thou art gone to the other world never to return.' Śankara thus explains the second half of the verse: 'As a man after ascending the peak of a mountain falls headlong, so my hopes after ascending to the sight of Śakuntalā are precipitated.' As to tata, see p. 175, note 1. Amara [ii., 3, 4] gives atata as a synonym of prapāta and bhṛigu, each of these words signifying 'a precipice' but there is no reason why atata should not be used as an epithet of prapāta, to denote a very precipitous declivity. The Bengālī MSS. read Kṛiptam nu tārat phalam eva puṇyāṣṭ asannivṛittau tad [asannivṛityaitad] atira manye manorathānām atata-prapātām.

It serves the god Brahmá as a vehicle, and hence the hansa-náda or 'cry' of this bird has a sacred character, just as the cry of the swan, with the Greeks: the voice of a beautiful woman is even compared to it: Bhatti-kárya, v. 18. Málini: compare p. 103, l. 4; p. 15, l. 6. Pádáh = pratyanta-parvatáh: Ś. = par-yanta-parvatáh: K. Gauri-guroh = Himálayasya: Ś. Himála, the god of the great snowy range was the father of the goddess Gauri, the wife of Śiva, whence she is called Párvatí, Himavatsutá, Himajá, etc. Sákhá—etc.: compare p. 17, note 2* at end; p. 23, note 1.

<sup>2</sup> Chézy considers that abhipretam must here be taken in the sense of 'going before all others,' 'having the preference,' i.e., the favourite ornament. There seems to me no reason why this word should not retain its regular meaning, and the passage be translated, 'there is another of Śakuntalá's ornaments intended (to be drawn) on this picture (but) forgotten by me.'

drunk by me in love's banquets, (then) I will make thee imprisoned in the hollow of a lotus.' Compare verse 77, p. 128, note 2. Bimbádharām: 'lip like the bimba,' i.e., of a bright red colour, like the gourd of the Bimba or Momordica monodelpha, a cucurbitaceous plant. So Bimbádharālakṭakāḥ: Mālavik., p. 30, 1; Ragh., xiii., 16. Compare our expression, 'cherry-lip.' Kamalodara—etc.: see p. 183, note 1. Dandhana seems here to mean 'the place of imprisonment.'

<sup>1</sup> 'How should he not stand in awe of one who has (threatened him with) so severe a punishment?' Tikṣṇa-danda, 'severe in punishing,' 'a strict disciplinarian.' The Prākṛit equivalent of tikṣṇa is tiṅha, according to Vararuchi, iii., 33, although most of the MSS. have tikkha. The root bhi in Sanskrit is usually joined with an abl. case, but the gen. is admissible. Kātavema, however, observes that this construction is peculiar to Prākṛit. Compare dakṣiṇya-pāśchāttāpasya bibhemi: Vikram., end of Act 2.

<sup>2</sup> 'Even I now did not understand the thing: how much less should he perceive that it was painted?' Anavagatārthā: so reads the Mackenzie MS., supported by Kātavema; the others, avagatārthā.

<sup>3</sup> 'Why has this ill-natured-act been perpetrated (by you)?' As to paurobhāgyam: see p. 211, note 2. Kātavema observes, purobhāgi = doshaka-darśi = dushtah, tasya karma paurobhāggam, and refers to Pāṇini, V., 1, 124.

duction of fourteen sacred things, a deadly poison called kāla-kūṭa or Halā-hala was generated, so virulent that it would have destroyed the world, had not the god Śiva swallowed it. Its only effect was to leave a black mark on his throat, whence his name nīla-kanṭha. Kātavema has kalahādo for kalahāt, 'strife,' and Sānkara, kūṭāt, 'snare.'

The Bengālī MSS. read dhautāśru-sekam. The duty of performing the Śrāddha devolved on the eldest son or on the nearest surviving relative. If no one survived to celebrate this rite, the manes of deceased progenitors sank from their celestial abode to the lower regions. Compare Ragh. I., 66, 67.

<sup>1</sup> 'A light being really (near at hand) this-man by reason [fault] of the screen (which covers it) experiences (all the) ill-effects of darkness.' Dr. Bochtlingk proposes to interpret andhāra-dosam by andhakāra-doshām, 'dark night,' or 'the darkness of night,' but this seems hardly a legitimate compound, nor does the sense require it.

<sup>2</sup> 'Longing for their portions of the sacrifice.' Jayna is the Prākṛit equivalent for yajna by Var., iii., 44. Great sacrifices were performed by kings in celebration of auspicious events, especially after marriage, in the hope of securing issue, and Indra with the inferior gods were invited to partake of portions set apart for them. These sacrifices were accompanied by largesses to the Brāhmanas, and festivities, in which the gods were supposed to be eager to participate. Compare Rāmāyana I., xiii., 6, 8. The mother of Indra was Aditi, who was the wife of Kāśyapa [see page 22, note 1]. It appears from Act 7 of the present play that Shakuntalā was at this time enjoying an asylum with the illustrious pair Kāśyapa and Aditi in some sacred retreat, where they were engaged in acts of mortification and penance.

<sup>3</sup> 'Therefore it is proper to wait for this period.' This is the reading of Kāṭavema. Some of the Devanāgarī have tā na juttam kalam, etc., for tasmān na yuktam kalam, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Abrahmanyam, ('Help! to the rescue!') according to Amara I., vii., 14, is abadhyoktau, i.e., implies an assertion that the thing in question is not to be killed. Abadhyo 'ham ityarthuh: Ś., 'the meaning is that, as a Brāhmaṇ, my person is sacred and inviolable.' Compare in the Uttara-Rāma-charitra, p. 30 : 'Then by a Brāhmaṇ, having placed his dead son at the royal gate, a cry of "Abrahmanyān" was set up, accompanied by a smiting on the breast.'

has been mounted on a pinnacle of the palace (called) Megha-pratichehhandu.
Sattiva = bhūta, 'a goblin' or 'evil spirit.'

<sup>1</sup> Griha, 'a house,' or 'a wife,' is masc. in the plur.: Am.-ko., ii., 5
The Sāh.-Darp. [p. 190] inserts nāma, 'forsooth,' after mamāpi.

day by day cannot be altogether ascertained. Is there (then) the power to know in every case by what road each of my subjects is walking?' lit., 'by what road who among my subjects,' etc. Tāvat = sakalyena: K. Pramāda- skhalitam, 'tripping,' 'stumbling,' 'blundering,' from carelessness. Aśeshato = sakalyena: K. According to Kātavema, this last clause presents an example of kāku which is defined as 'a change in the tone of the voice,' 'giving emphasis.' Thus, 'Is there the power?' becomes equivalent to 'There certainly is not the power:'. see Sāh.-darp., p. 24.

<sup>3</sup> Avidhā ityākrośe. The interjection avidhā is used in calling for assistance:
K. Translate, 'Help! help!' The word is not given in the Dictionary, nor is any mention of it made in the grammars. Two of the MSS. have aviha for avidhā; the Mackenzie, aviddho; my own avidū. Aviha and avidhā seem to be interchangeable. Avidhā occurs in Mālavik., p. 12, l. 22; p. 24, l. 7;
p. 56, l. 8. Dr. Boehtlingk suggests that avida in Mṛich., 213, 6; 312, 9, may be for aviha or avidhā.

<sup>2</sup> 'Priding thyself on the power of rendering thyself invisible.' Tiraskarini is properly a veil to cover the head, used by celestial beings to render themselves invisible: compare p. 227, l. 8. It is here the science or art, peculiar to such beings, of so concealing themselves. This interpretation is supported by the gloss of Ranganātha on tiraskaraṇi-prachchhannā in Act 2 of Vikr.; tiraskaraṇi = antardhāna-vidyā. It answers to the śikhā-bandhan-vidyā, 'art of tying [covering] the top-knot,' called aparājita in a preceding page.

<sup>3</sup> 'He it is fits the arrow (to the bow) who will slay thee worthy-of-death, and save a Brāhmaṇ worthy-of-preservation. For the flamingo extracts [takes] the milk (and) leaves behind the water that is mixed with it.' The Hindūs imagine that the Hansa or flamingo [see page 250, note 2] has the power of separating milk from water. Compare Mahābh., Śakuntalopākhyaṇa, vii., 88, Prājnas tu jalpatām punsām śrutvā vāchah śubhāsūbhāh, Gunavad vākyam ddatte, hansah kshīram ivāmbhasah. Bhartṛi-hari [II. 15] has the following sentiment—‘Brahmā [whose vehicle is the flamingo] when very angry with this bird, can destroy his nest among the lotuses, but cannot deprive him of that celebrated and inestimable faculty which he possesses, of separating milk from water.’ The reference is probably to the milky juice of the water-lily, which would be its natural food, and to which allusion is often made by the Hindū poets. As to rakshati, see p. 85, note 1.

<sup>2</sup> Kālanemi, son of the demon Hiranya-kaśipu, was a Daitya or Asura [see p. 86, note 1] with a hundred arms and as many heads. These Daityas were sometimes called Dānavas, from their mother Danu, who as well as Diti was one of the wives of Kaśyapa and daughters of Daksha. The Rākshasas, or cannibal demons who, for the sake of human flesh, waged perpetual war with men, as the Daityas did with the gods, were related to the Daityas.

<sup>3</sup> Nārada is a celebrated divine sage or Rishi, usually reckoned among the ten Prajāpatis or Brahmādikas first created by Brahmā, and called his sons. He acts as a kind of messenger of the gods: see the end of Act V. of the Vikramorvaśī.

My own MS. and the Mackenzie have jantuh for hi janah. Most of the Bengālī MSS. read tejasot sankshobhāt prāyah pratipadyate tejah.

Wreaths and garlands of flowers were much used by the Hīndūs as marks of honorary distinction, as well as for ornaments on festive occasions, and to adorn sacrificial victims: compare page 222, line 1, note 1. They were suspended round the neck [see page 151, note 1], or placed on the head. Mandāra is one of the five ever-blooming trees of Swarga, or Indra's heaven. Another of these trees is said to be the Hari-chandana mentioned above, and another the Santāna; but the two most celebrated are the Pārijāta and the Kalpa-druma, or tree granting all desires. Jayanta is the son of Indra by his favourite wife Paulomī or Śāchi.

<sup>1</sup> 'The heaven of Indra, friend of the gods, has been made free from the plague of the Dánavas by two (means): now by thy flat-jointed arrows: and formerly by the claws of the Man-lion.' Sura-sakha: see p. 86, note 1. Tridiva = Swarga: each of the superior Hindú gods has a heaven, paradise, or elysium of his own. That of Brahmá is called Brahma-loka, situated on the summit of Mount Meru; that of Vishnu, Vaikuṇṭha, on the Himálayas; that of Śiva and Kuvera, Kailāsa, also on the Himálayas; that of Indra, Swarga or Nandana. The latter, though properly on one of the points of Mount Meru, below Brahmá's paradise, is sometimes identified with the sphere of the sky or heaven in general. Uddhṛta, etc., lit., 'having the thorns of Dánavas extracted.' Kāntaka, 'a thorn,' is often used for a pestilent or noxious person or thing. Dánava: see p. 268, note 2. Nata-parvabhiḥ = nimna-parvabhiḥ; Natáni anunnatáni parvāni yesham: K. <sup>1</sup> 'In which course [path, orbit] of the (seven) winds are we now moving?' The Hindūs divide the heavens into seven Mārgas or Pathas, i.e., paths, courses, orbits (like the stories of the Mussalmān creed) assigning a particular vāyu or wind to each. Compare Vishṇu-Purāṇa, p. 212 [Wilson]. The first of these seven vāyu-mārgas or vāyu-pathas is identical with the bhūvar-loka, or atmospheric region, extending from the bhūr-loka, or terrestrial region [comprising the earth, and the adho-loka, called Pātāla] upwards to the sun. The wind assigned to this Mārga is called āvaha, and its office is to bear along the atmosphere, clouds, meteors, lightning, etc. The other six make up the svar-loka or heavenly region with which Swarga is often identified [compare p. 273, note 1] in the following order:—The 2d. Mārga is that of the sun, and its wind, called pravaḥa or prarāḥa causes the sun to revolve; 3d. that of the moon, its wind samvaha or samvāḥa impels the moon; 4th. that of the nakshatra, or lunar constellations, its wind, udvaha, causes the revolution of these asterisms; 5th. that of the graha, or planets, its wind virāḥa bears along the seven planets; 6th. that of the saptarshi, or seven stars of the Great Bear, its wind parivaha bears along these luminaries, as well as the svar-gangā, or heavenly Ganges [saptarshi-chakram svar-gangāṁ shashthah parivahas tathā: not as Dr. Boehtlingk suggests saptarshi-chakram svar-gangāḥ, etc.]: it appears from the next verse that this was the Mārga in which Indra's car was at the moment moving; 7th. that of dhruva, or the polar-star, the pivot or axis of the whole planetary system, to which, according to the Vishṇu-Purāṇa [pp. 230, 240, Wilson], 'all the the celestial luminaries are bound by aerial cords, and are made to travel in their proper orbits, being kept in their places by their respective bands of air.' According to the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, from which, as quoted by Kāṭya-vema, the above account is taken, the wind of the 7th Mārga, causing the revolution of the polar-star, is parārāha [? parārāha]. Obs. katara is sometimes used for katama. All the Devanāgarī MSS. read kataraśmin for katamaśmin.

'They call this road, freed-from-all-impurities-by-the-second-stride-of-Vishṇu, (the road) of that wind Parivaha, which bears along the triple-flowing-river [Ganges] located in heaven, and causes the stars [of the Great Bear] to revolve, duly-distributing-their-rays.' See the last note. Tri-srotas = swar-gangā = mandākinī: K. The Ganges was supposed to take its rise in the toe of Vishṇu [whence one of its names, Vishṇu-padī]; thence it flowed through the heavenly sphere, being borne along by the wind Parivaha and identified with the Mandākinī, or Milky way: its second course is through the earth; but the weight of its descent was borne by Śiva's head, whence after wandering among the tresses of his hair, it descended through a chasm in the Himālayas: its third course is through Pātāla, or the lower regions, the residence of the Dāityas and Nāgas, and not to be confounded with Naraka, 'hell,' 'the place of punishment.' Gagana-pratishṭhām - ākāśa-sthām: Ś., Ch.; Were it not for this interpretation I should translate 'the glory of the skies:' compare p. 260, l. 11. There is doubtless a double-entendre. Jyotiṣhi, etc., i.e., saptarshīṇām dhishṇyāni: K. Pravibhakta-rāsmih, i.e., asankīrṇa-rāsmayah tejāṁsi yasmin karmani tat tathoktam: K. Vartayati = sanchārayati: K. Dwitiya, etc., i.e., dwityena harer viśnor vikramena pāda-nyāseṇa nirdośam: K. Tasya vāyor, etc., i.e., tasya parivāhākhyasya vāyor mārgam panthānam imam grīhṇanti āmananti. Parivāho [sic] nāma swar-gangām saptarshī-maṇḍalam pravartayati śaśṭho vāyu-skandho yathoktam brahmāṇḍa-purāṇe: K. The story of Vishṇu's second stride was this—An Asura or Dāitya [see p. 86, note 1] named Bali or Mahābali, a descendant of Hiranya-kāśipu had, by his devotions, gained the dominion of Heaven, Earth, and Pātāla. This was granted, and the god immediately expanded himself till he filled the world, deprived Bali at the first step, of earth; at the second, of heaven; but, in consideration of some merit, left Pātāla still under his rule. Another account makes him comprehend earth in his first step, the region of the air in his second, and heaven in his third. Hence tri-vikrama, tri-pāda, as names of Vishnu. And again, Uraśt-gātra-sparśād iva nirvṛitam me sa-hṛdayam śarīram. The organs of sense [indriya] according to the Sāṅkhya system are divided into two classes, external, vāhyendriya; and internal, antarindriya. The external are of two kinds: the five 'organs of perception,' jñānendriya, viz., the ear, eye, skin, tongue, and nose; and the five 'organs of action,' karmendriya, viz., the throat, hand, foot, organ of excretion, and that of generation. The internal organs are three, viz., manas, 'the mind,' or organ of thought; buddhi, 'the reason,' or organ of apprehension; ahankāra, 'individuality,' or 'self-consciousness.' Chitta, 'the heart,' or organ of feeling is sometimes added. Amara [I., 4, 17] divides the indriya into two grand classes—1. karmendriyāṇi; and 2. buddhindriyāṇi or dhindriyāṇi, 'intellectual organs;' the latter comprises the jñānendriyāṇi with manas: this seems to be the popular division. Compare Vikram., Act iii., Bhavitaryatānurvīdhayāni buddhindriyāṇi.

Behold! the earth is being brought up to my side [near me], as if by some one flinging it upwards.' In the same way to a voyager in a balloon at a very great height, the surface of the earth would seem flat, the trees would be compressed within their foliage like mushrooms, and the rivers shrivel into threads or tiny rivulets; but, on descending, the mountains would appear to stand out, and the earth to recede from them, the trees would exhibit their elevation, and the rivers their breadth of water. tanajjatām = udgacchhatām: K. Ararohati = adho-gacchhāti: K. Parābhāntara, etc.: The Colebrooke MS. and my own have parṇa-svedantara; the Taylor, parṇeshvāntara; the Mackenzie, parṇa-prastara; Kāṭavema, parṇān-ara-vilīnam. Skandhodayāt = krodāvirbhāt: K. Santānat = jala-vistārat: K. the other Devanāgarī have santānais. Tanubhāva, etc., Tanubhāvena ākṣmaticeṇa adriṣṭam salīlam yāsām: K. Iyaktim bhajanti, i.e., vyaktā bhavanti: K.

An account of Kāśyapa, who, as son of Marichi, is called Mārīcha, is given in page 22, note 1, and p. 86, note 1. He is here said to be one of the Prajāpatis, or fathers of all created things, who were Brahmā's sons, created by him to supply the universe with inhabitants, and who, after fulfilling their mission, retired from the world to practise penance and prepare for death. The Vāyupurāṇa certainly reckons Kāśyapa, with his father-in-law Dakṣha and other sages, among the Prajāpatis, but he does not belong to the seven original Prajāpatis of whom his father Marichi is one, nor to the ten enumerated by Manu [I., 35]. Of the thirteen daughters of Dakṣha married to Kāśyapa, the eldest, and his favourite wife, was the Aditi introduced here, from whom were born the gods and particularly the twelve Ādityas, the several representatives of the sun in the twelve months of the year. From Diti, Danu, and others of the remaining twelve, came the Asuras or demons; and, from Vinatā, Aruṇa 'the Dawn,' [see p. 142, note 3] and Garuḍa, 'the vehicle of Vishnu and king of birds.' Swāyambhuvāt = Brahma-sunoh: K. Surāsura-guruh: as to guruh, see p. 173, note 3, in middle, and p. 91, note 1, correcting the typographical error in the second line of the last note, 'venerable hermit' being a misprint for 'venerable parent.' Sa-patnikas, i.e., patnyā adityā saha: compare such compounds as sa-strīka, sa-śrīka, etc.

These hillocks sometimes rise, in Bengal, to the height of eight or ten feet, and are held sacred: see Manu, iv., 46, 238. Such was the immovable impassiveness of this ascetic, that the ants had thrown up their mound as high as his waist, without being disturbed, and the birds had built their nests in his hair. Sandashṭa, etc. = āśliṣṭa-nirmokena: compare p. 121, note 2. The serpent's skin was used by the ascetic in place of the regular Brahmanical cord. This thread or cord, sometimes called the sacrificial cord yajñopavīta, might be made of various substances, such as cotton, hempen or woollen thread, according to the class of the wearer, and was worn over the left shoulder and under the right. The rite of investiture with this thread, which conferred the title dvija 'twice-born,' and corresponded in some respects with the Christian rite of baptism, was performed on youths of three classes, at ages varying from eight to sixteen, from eleven to twenty-two, and from twelve to twenty-four, respectively: see Manu, ii., 36, etc. Latā-pratāna = latā-santāna, 'the spreading part of a creeper.' Jaṭā-maṇḍala is the circle or bundle of matted entangled hair which ascetics allowed to grow on the crown of their heads, and which fell in long clotted tresses over the back and shoulders. Jaṭā is, especially, Śiva's hair so plaited and arranged, through which the Ganges meandered before its descent upon the earth. Nichitam = pūritam: K. Sthānūr = śākhā-hiṇṇa taru-skandhaḥ. Abhy-arkā-śimbam = sūrya-maṇḍalābhīmukham: K. The classification of Rishis varies, but the following seems to be the usual gradation:—1. Rishi; 2. Maharshi; 3. Paramarshi; 4. Devarshi; 5. Brahmarshi. Amara mentions two other orders, Kāṇḍarshis and Śrutarshis. The Rājārshi was a mixed order: see p. 83, note 2.

<sup>3</sup> Kāṭavema quotes a passage from the Vasanta-rājīya to show that different movements of the lips, such as biting the lip, pouting the under-lip, etc., were significant of various emotions. The gloss is corrupt, but it appears that adhara-darsana = adhara-prasāraṇa is [anādare] a gesture of contempt. Compare Psalm xxii., 7: 'All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip,' etc.

‘This child appears to me (to possess) the germ [rudiment] of mighty energy [spirit, courage]. He stands like fire in a state of scintillation [in a

<sup>2</sup> ‘His hand stretched forth to beg for a coveted object, having the fingers connected by a web, appears like [shines like] a single lotus-blossom, the spaces between whose petals is imperceptible, expanded by the early dawn, whose-glow-is-just-kindled.’ Pranaya = prārthana: Ś. Jāla, etc.; Jāleshu antareshu grathitāḥ sanhatāḥ angulayo yasya: K. For grathitāngulih Śankara has sanhatāngulih = saṁśliṣṭāngulih, and remarks that a hand whose fingers were thus united was indicative of great valour [mahā-purushatvam]. He adds jāla-pāda-bhujāriti nara-nārāyaṇa-viśeṣaṇam uktam, ‘webbed-feet and webbed-hands are said to be characteristics of Nara and Nārāyaṇa.’ Hindū poets reckon thirty-two marks of greatness, and he who possessed them all was said to be dvā-triṁśallakṣhaṇopetaḥ. The child’s fingers, being drawn together by this membrane or web, would bear some resemblance to an expanding lotus-flower, the fingers answering to the long petals, which would be only separated towards the top. This seems to be the sense: my first inclination was to translate, ‘having the fingers regularly marked with reticulated lines,’ or ‘having the fingers drawn together into (the form of) a bud.’ Alakshya [= adrīṣya: K.]: So read all the Devanāgarī MSS. excepting my own, which has alakshya, with the Bengālī; Śankara, however, has alakshya. Patrāntaram = dala-vivaram: K., Ś. Iddha-rāgayā navoṣhaś, etc.; Ushaś, ‘the dawn,’ is usually neuter in classical Sanskrit. In the Vedas, as here, it is feminine. Thus in Rig-veda i., 46, 1, Eṣo uśā apūrvyā vyuchekhātī priyā divah. See also Rig-veda i., 48; 3, 5, 7, 8, 13, and i., 62, 8, and i, 92, 4, and i., 113, 4, etc. It is possible that the feminine noun ushā may form its vowel cases from ushas, as jard from jaras; nom. jard, jarasau, jarasah; instr., jarasā, jarābhyām, jarābhih, etc.: see Professor Wilson's Grammar, rule 129. The following is the corrupt gloss of Śāṅkara: ushah-pratyushasi kīvam pihaprasvāntu [?] pihprasvāntu: Ch.] yoshatīti koshaḥ. Kāṭavema explains navośasā as a Bahuvrīhi, 'by the early-dawned one:' Navam uho yasyāḥ śā navośā prāṭhasandhyā tayā bhinnam vikasitam. As to pankajam: see p. 212, note 3.

<sup>1</sup> This pleonastic word, according to Lassen [Instīt. Prāk., p. 118] is derived from the Sanskrit kṛite, and is equivalent to pertinens ad, 'in the cottage belonging to me,' etc. Some of the MSS. omit the word.

<sup>2</sup> 'I have a great fancy for this unmanageable (child).' Durlalita, i.e., durlabham tpeitam yasya [S.], 'difficult to be coaxed or pleased,' 'wayward,' 'naughty.' Kāṭavema reads durlasitāya and interprets by dhūrtāya, 'roguish,' 'mischievous.' The causal sense of the root lal is 'to coax,' though dur-lālita might then be expected. The primitive idea is certainly that of 'sporting,' 'toying,' 'taking pleasure,' as in the root las. So in Vikramorvaśī, Act II., the king complains that his eye-sight has become durlalitam, i.e., 'difficult

The Scholiast there explains the word by dur-āgrastam. In the Sāhit.-darp., p. 193, line 1, the following is cited from the Mahābh.: Dhik dhik sūta kim kṛitavān asi vatsasya me prakṛiti-durlalitasya, where durlalita is explained by durvilasita.

This is the verse with which Chézy is enraptured: '... strophe incomparable, que tout père, on plutôt toute mère, ne pourra lire sans sentir battre son cœur, tant le poète a su y rendre, avec les nuances les plus délicates, l'expression vivante de l'amour maternel.'

<sup>2</sup> 'O gentle sir,' lit., 'O thou with auspicious countenance.' According to the Sāhit.-darp. [ p. 179, line 16] bhadra-mukha and saumya are the titles used by the inferior characters in addressing the king's son: saumya bhadra-mukhetyevam adhamaistu kumārakah. They do not seem to be so restricted, as in the 5th. Act the Bengālī MSS. make Gautamī address the king himself as bhadra-mukha; and Kātavama extends the application of both terms to Compare the parallel passages in the 5th Act of the Vikramorvaśī, and the following from the Mahābh.: *Putra-sparśāt sukhataṛaḥ sparśo loke na vidyate. It seems to have been a constant practice in ancient India for kings when they had reigned sufficiently long, to retire from the charge of government and betake themselves to penitential exercises. They first associated the Yuva-rāja or heir-apparent with themselves, and then left him in quiet possession of the throne.

Compare the next note. It was probably a kind of locket, containing some herb with talismanic properties, worn round the waist, to serve as an amulet. Karandāka certainly usually signifies 'a little box,' but it may possibly be the name for the herb itself. Kātavema explains it by rakshā-ghutikā [? gutikā], 'a magical ball.' Some of the Bengālī have rakshā-kāṇḍo; Sanskara and Chandra-ś., rakshā-gaṇḍo and rakshā-gaṇḍako.

As to the name aparājītā, compare p. 266, note 2. The jāta-karma is the fourth of the twelve Sanskāras, or purificatory rites, described in Manu [ii., 27, etc.], and the first after the child's birth: compare p. 258, note 2, p. 198, note 3. It was performed by giving the child honey and clarified butter out of a golden spoon, before separating the navel-string.

If the latter be retained, translate 'the skin of whose lips is pale red from the absence of colouring or paint.' There is no doubt that unpainted lips were a sign of mourning, but this is sufficiently implied in pātalośṭha, and it is a question whether sanskāra can ever mean 'paint.' amongst them the old MS. [Bodleian, 233], supported by Śāṅkara and Chandra-Sekhara, read asanskūrāt lolākam idam mukham, 'this countenance, having its curls hanging loosely from want of dressing.' Oshtha-puta, 'the covering of the lip;' so akshi-puta, 'the skin covering the eye,' 'the eye-lid.' The student is reminded that in a compound, oshtha optionally causes the elision of a preceding a. The Mackenzie MS. has pātaloṣṭham mukham priye.

For such, for the most part, is the behaviour of those over-whom-(the quality of)-darkness-has-the-mastery, on happy (auspicious)-occasions. A blind man shakes off even the garland thrown on his head, suspecting it to be [with the suspicion of its being] a snake.' Vyākham = aprīyam, K. - riprīyam, Ch. Apātū: some of the Bengali MSS. have upātū, which is unintelligible. Kīnapī, i.e., anirvacchanīya-rūpam yathā syāt, 'in a manner not to be explained.' S. Tadā = pratyāśā-kāle, 'at the time of repudiation.' Prabala-tamasām, prabalam ajñānam gesham te tathoktāḥ: K. According to the Hīndū philosophy there were three qualities or properties incident to the state of humanity, viz.: 1. Sattva, 'excellence' or

For vāshpam in the fourth line, some of the Bengālī have kānte, unsupported by any of the Devanāgarī MSS. The repetition of vāshpa seems at first unnecessary, but not if it be borne in mind that vāshpa is, appropriately, the moisture in the eye, and vāshpa-vindu, the tear-drop when it has left the eye: see p. 169, note 2 in middle.*

They are the children of Aditi and Kaśyapa, and the gods Viṣṇu and Indra are reckoned among them. The other ten, according to the Vishnu-purāṇa [p. 234], are Dhātṛi, Aryama, Mitra, Varuṇa, Vivasvat, Pūshan, Parjanya, Anśu, Bhaga, and Tvasṭṛi: but the names of the Ādityas vary in the other Purāṇas. Tejasah, i.e., sūryātmakasya, 'consisting of the sun.' likely that yajna-bhāga is here synonymous with kratu-bhuj, 'a god,' though yajna-bhuj would be the more usual form. Ātma-bhuvah [abl. case from ātma-bhū] = śacayambhuvah = brahmanah: K., Ch. Paro = śreshtho. Purusha Vishnu: K. : = Nārāyaṇa: Ś., Ch. Bharāya = janmane: K. : = aratārāya: Ś. Āspadam = pratishṭhām — sthitim: K., Ś. Upendravatārasya kīranam aklam bhavati: K. Dicandicam = mithunam = strī-punsayor yugalam. Srashtur Brahmanah: K., Ś. Ekāntaram = ekāntaritam: Ś. Ekah purushah antaram vyacadhānam yasya tat tathoktam. Brahmaṇo Marīchih, Marīcheh Kāśyapah, Brahmaṇo Dakshah, Dakshād Aditir iti ekāntaram: K. Ekah purusho antaram antardhānam yasya tad dicandicam: Chézy. As Kāśyapa and Aditi were the grandchildren of Brahmā, they were only removed from him by Marīchi and Daksha, their parents and his children: see p. 280, note 1. Vishnu, as Nārāyaṇa, or the supreme spirit, [purusha] moved over the waters before the creation of the world, and from his navel came the lotus from which Brahmā sprang. As Vishnu, or the Preserver, he became incarnate in various forms, and chose Kāśyapa and Aditi, from whom all human beings were descended, as his medium of incarnation or place of birth, especially in the Avatāra in which he was called 'Upendra,' (or Indrānuja, Indrāvaraja) 'Indra's younger brother' [according to some identified with Kṛishṇa], and in his Vāmana, or Dwarf-Avatāra: see p. 276, note 1. Purusha is properly 'that which sleeps or abides in the body' [purī śete]. The worshippers of Vishnu identify him with Nārāyaṇa and with Brahma, and name him Mahā-purusha, Purushottama, i.e., 'the supreme spirit,' thus exalting him above Brahmā, the Creator. Kālidāsa seems by this verse to include himself among the Vaishnavas.

<sup>1</sup> 'First (came) the accomplishment of my desires; afterwards, the sight (of thee). Hence thy favour (towards me) has indeed been unprecedented.' Sankara gives the following interpretation: Śakuntalā-prāpakam bhavadarśanam bharishyati iti eram mamābhipretam āsīt, tāvat prabhūvāt darśanapūrvam nirvyūḍham. Tathā cha naimittikānantaram nimittotpattir iti anugrahasyāpūrvatvacam iti bhāvah: 'My desire was that the sight of thee might lead to my recovery of Śakuntalā. But (my meeting her) was arranged through (thy) divine power, before my presentation to thee. Thus after the effect was the appearance of the cause. The meaning is, that the favour (of my seeing thee and receiving thy blessing) did not precede (the attainment of my desire), and hence that the favour was unprecedented, as the accomplishment of my wishes ought naturally to have resulted from thy blessing.' There seems to be a double meaning in apūrvah.

<sup>2</sup> 'First appears the blossom, then the fruit; first the rising of clouds, afterwards the rain. This (is) the regular-course of cause and effect; but the success-of-my-wishes (came) before thy favour.' Naimittika, 'that which is connected with the nimitta or is dependant on it,' 'the effect.' Puras - prathamatas: Ś. Sampadah [nom. pl.] = abhishta-siddhih: Ś. It is clearly meant to be synonymous with abhipreta-siddhih in the previous clause.

<sup>3</sup> 'Thus (it is that) the creators of-all-beings perform favours.' Vidhātṛi must here be equivalent to Prajāpati: see p. 280, note 1.

chariot whose motion is not (made) unsteady by uneven-ground, he will subjugate the earth, consisting of seven islands. Here, from his forcible taming of the animals, he (is called) Sarva-damana; but (then) he will acquire the appellation Bharata, from his support of the world.' Rathena: see p. 8, line 1. Anutkhāta, etc. [anmōnnata-pradēśasyābhāvād anutkhāta: K.]: so reads the Mackenzie MS., supported by Kātavema; the others, anudghāta: compare p. 9, l. 4, note 3. Stimīta = anishkampa: K. - Aprati-bandhārtha-durgamanena: Ś. 'By this epithet it is indicated that the chariot would have the power of going in the air' [tena vīśhanena rathasya ākūśa-gāmiticam sūchitam]: K. Sapta-dwīpām: according to the mythical geography of the Hindūs, the earth consisted of seven islands, or rather insular continents, surrounded by seven seas. That inhabited by men was called Jambudwīpa, and was in the centre, having in the middle of it the sacred mountain Meru or Sumeru, a kind of Mount Olympus, inhabited by the gods. About Jambu flowed the sea of salt-water [lavana], which extends to the second Dwīpa, called Plaksha, which is in its turn surrounded by a sea of sugar-cane-juice [ikshu]. And so with the five other Dwīpas, viz., Śālmali, Kuśa, Krauncha, Śāka, and Pushkara, which are severally surrounded by the seas of wine [sura], clarified butter [sarpis], curds [dadhi], milk [dugdha], and fresh-water [jala]: Vish.-pur., p. 166. Aprati-ratha = atulya-ratha = mahāratha: Ś: see p. 177, note 2 in middle. Iha = asmin āśrame: K. sattvānām = prāṇinām sinhādīnām: Ś. - śarabha-sinhādīnām: K. Prasabha-damanāt = balātkāreṇa mardanāt. The name Bharata is derived from the root bhri [fero] 'to support.' Many Indian princes were so named, but the most celebrated was this son of Dushyanta and Śakuntalā, who so extended his empire that from him the whole of India was called Bharata-varsha or Bhārata-varsha; and whose descendants, the sons of Dhṛitarāshtra and Pāṇḍu, by their quarrels, formed the subject of the great epic poem called Mahābhārata: see p. 14, note 2.

'We invoke all blessings on him for whom the prescribed-rites were performed by your holiness,' or 'we have high hopes and expectations of him,' etc. As to kṛita-samāhāra, see p. 198, note 2; and p. 198, note 3.
